"'I was just thinking that if I had a little daughter, and she grew up and married and had a little baby, and the baby fell into that open fire there, what an awful, awful thing that would be.'"

President Whitman of the Merchants' Association said yesterday that he had not talked to President Roosevelt about life insurance business, and that his association had not taken up the subject in any way.

JEWS FIGHTING JEWS IN WARSAW; 8 DEAD

Socialist Society Makes War on Disreputable Resorts.

POUND JEWELRY WITH STONES

Reformers Smash Into Houses and Utterly Wreck Them — Cossacks Use Guns After Hours of Rioting.

WARSAW, Russian Poland, May 25.—Serious disorders began here last night owing to an attempt of the Jewish Socialist organization called the Bund to purge the Jewish district of Warsaw of all disreputable resorts and persons. The fighting spread to the surrounding streets, continued until midnight, recommenced this morning, and was still in progress late to-night. Eight persons have already been killed and 100 wounded, nineteen seriously. The damage to property has been considerable. There has been no pillaging, but the destruction of the furniture in the various resorts has been absolute.

The mob, armed with axes, smashed the doors and windows and brought the furniture out on the streets, where they broke it into small pieces. The owners of the furniture, in attempting to defend their belongings, were attacked, beaten, and even killed. Knives and revolvers were used freely, and many persons were terribly injured.

The authorities took no steps to prevent the riots until late to-night, when the Cossacks fired on the crowds at two points, wounding four persons.

The character of the disturbances is unprecedented. The whole affair is a conflict between the respectable Jewish Socialist classes and the disreputable Jewish element. There are conflicting stories as to the origin of the trouble. One report is that the respectable Jews, tired of hearing the members of their race called thieves, usurers, and other opprobrious names, resolved, as the police were receiving bribes for protecting disreputable houses and persons, to take the matter into their own hands.

Another report has it that Jewish roughs, in the guise of members of the bund, were levying blackmail upon shopkeepers, thus enraging the Socialists. In any case the Socialists seemingly determined on a crusade against the undesirable persons of their own race.

Extraordinary scenes were witnessed late to-night when the crowds visited the better section of the city and demolished apartments filled with costly effects. Wardrobes, pianos, and mirrors were thrown out of the windows. The mob in the streets left open spaces for the falling articles, and then completed the work of destruction. In one place a quantity of valuable jewelry was taken out and deliberately smashed with stones.

The whole affair was carefully organized. The leaders were supplied with the addresses of the owners of disreputable houses and scarcely a single resort in Warsaw escaped destruction.

JAIL FOR JEWS' ASSAILANTS.

Exceeded Their Rights, Court at Kishineff Expresses It.

KISHINEFF, May 25.—In an official investigation of one of the numerous cases of assault on Jews and students in the streets it has been decided that the assailants, including two members of the nobility and five burghers, "exceeded their rights" by stopping and beating passers-by.

All of them were sentenced to short terms of imprisonment, while the victim of the assault, who defended himself with a revolver, was fined $12.50.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 25.—The Voskhod, a Jewish paper, reviewing to-day the recent riots at Zhitomir, Province of Volhynia, denies that the Jews during target practice on the bank of the river fired at a portrait of the Emperor. The paper says the Jews were armed in self-defense, and when they were first attacked replied with shots in the air.

The Voskhod further complains that the authorities and the Christian population generally were indifferent to the massacre of the Jews, the soldiers not being called to the rescue promptly, and that when they did appear they were slow to act. A Russian student, it is further asserted, was killed because he tried to protect the Jews.

VILLAGERS ARM FOR FIGHT.

Situation in Southern Caucasus Becoming Serious.

ST. PETERSBURG, Friday, May 26.—The most disquieting news regarding the internal situation and of the renewal of hostilities between Armenians and Moslems in the Southern Caucasus, has reached St. Petersburg.

Simultaneously with the assassination Wednesday of Prince Nakachidze, Governor of Baku, came information that the Province of Erivan is aflame with racial strife. The villagers there are arming themselves with bombs and revolvers and gathering in hostile camps, paying no heed to the efforts of high officials of Church and State to restore peace.

Several encounters have already taken place, in which seven persons were killed and a number wounded. Further bloodshed is feared, as the number of troops there is inadequate for the preservation of order. The Government is sending reinforcements.

At Gomel, where anti-Jewish riots took place least year, a collision is reported between striking workmen and Cossacks, in which one workman was killed and several wounded.

RIDDER FOR McCLELLAN.

But Says His Organization as Such Will Support No Candidate.

Herman Ridder, long the head of the German-American Reform Union, which in former years has been strongly anti-Tammany, declared yesterday that the majority of the members of the organization were strongly in favor of supporting Mayor McClellan for re-election. He also stated that his organization, as such, would not take any part in the coming municipal campaign, but would leave the individual members to support the candidates of their choice.

"The majority of the members of the G. A. R. U. are for McClellan," said Mr. Ridder. "There is no room for doubt on this point. McClellan has proved himself to be as good a Mayor as it is possible for a machine man to be, and between Tammany Hall with McClellan and a candidate of the Odell machine, we want McClellan.

"Our organization will support good candidates regardless of party. In this respect it differs from the Citizens' Union, which in recent campaigns helped to elect Republican candidates to the Assembly and gave no help to Democratic candidates, no matter how worthy. The Tammany machine is preferable to the Odell machine at all times, and if Tammany names a ticket and Odell names a ticket we can see no need of our acting as an organization. If the Citizens' Union puts up a ticket it will run third and will have absolutely no chance to win."

Mr. Ridder warmly approved the Citizens' Union course in inviting the co-operation of Tammany Hall in a good government campaign.

JUSTICE DAVY DOUBTS HUMMEL WAS WRONGED

Thus Closes Long Argument in Dodge Divorce Tangle Case.

JURY INQUIRY PUBLISHED

Lawyer Refused to Tell Who Paid Texas Expenses—Dodge Affidavit Made in Hummel's Office.

"If the calling of Hummel before the Grand Jury were an invasion of his rights and vitiated the indictment, it should be set aside as a matter of course, but I have my doubts on that point."

These words, by Justice Davy, ended the argument in the Criminal Branch of the Supreme Court yesterday on the motion made by De Lancey Nicoll for the dismissal of the three indictments returned against his client, Abraham Hummel, and charging him with conspiracy and subornation of perjury in connection with the annulment obtained by Charles F. Dodge of his wife's decree of divorce from the Supreme Court in December, 1903.

All day was consumed by the arguments made by Mr. Nicoll and District Attorney Jerome. At last Justice Davy set next Monday as the day for filing papers. Mr. Nicoll will avail himself of that privilege, but Mr. Jerome announced that, as the case stood, he saw no reason for burdening the court with additional argument.

If Justice Davy decides in favor of Mr. Jerome, the trial of Hummel will begin on June 5, the date fixed for that purpose by the court.

Prior to making his motion, Mr. Nicoll had filed a forty-six-page printed document in support of it. This paper contained affidavits by himself and his client, the full text of the charges against Hummel filed by Mr. Jerome with the Bar Association, copies of letters concerning those charges exchanged between Mr. Nicoll and Egerton L. Winthrop, Jr., the attorney of the Grievance Committee of the Bar Association, and a stenographic report of the testimony given by Hummel before the January Grand Jury. The document threw a lot of light on hitherto unknown or only guessed at phases of the Dodge-Morse divorce tangle.

Basing his argument on his motion paper, Mr. Nicoll characterized the proceedings resulting in the appearance of his client before the Grand Jury as "an inquisitorial investigation," for which there was neither warrant nor excuse in the law. He demanded the dismissal of the indictments, both on the ground that the Grand Jury had exceeded its purely judicial power in returning the indictments, and that the constitutional privileges of his client had been clearly violated.

"The Grand Jury has not the power to institute inquisition on chance or speculation that crime may be discovered," he said. "It can only investigate specific crimes committed by some certain person. If, on the other hand, as I believe, its proceedings were directed against a certain person, then the calling of that person and the compelling of him to testify was a palpable violation of his constitutional rights. And the proof of this is that Hummel since has been indicted on the basis of this investigation, and that, still earlier, the District Attorney had filed charges against him with the Bar Association."

After listening to the counter-argument by Mr. Jerome, Justice Davy said:

"It seems to me that a lawyer of Mr. Hummel's wide experience and knowledge of criminal law, when he went before the Grand Jury, would not testify to anything tending to incriminate him. He knew when he was called the nature of the proceedings and of the investigation, and if he chose to waive his constitutional privileges and give testimony I think he had a right to do so, and that the Grand Jury might have taken into consideration the evidence he gave.

"It seems, however, that the Grand Jury was specifically instructed not to take any of the evidence given by him when finding the indictment against him. I must assume, therefore, that the jury had ample and abundant evidence on which to base the indictments. It seems a rather narrow rule to hold to your doctrine, that an indictment would be vitiated because a man was subpoenaed and appeared before the Grand Jury, declining to answer on the ground that he might incriminate himself. But your points are interesting, and I'll take all the papers in the case and consider them carefully."

The charges filed by Mr. Jerome as a private citizen with the Bar Association for the purpose of having disbarment proceedings instituted against Hummel were dated Oct. 3, 1904, and began with these words: "On information and belief I hereby accuse Abraham Hummel, a member of the bar of this State, of fraud, deceit, and gross professional misconduct."

The paper then relates the incidents leading up to the annulment of Mrs. Dodge-Morse's decree of divorce from her first husband, including Charles F. Dodge's testimony that Daniel Roundtree, a lawyer, had visited him at Atlanta to obtain from him evidence to be used by his wife for the purpose of obtaining the divorce. This fact and the denial by Dodge of having been served with papers in the suit were included in a sworn affidavit, signed by Dodge and filed by Hummel with Justice McCall of the Supreme Court. The case was then referred to Ernest Hall as referee. Mr. Jerome's charges concluded with the following passage:

In all the proceedings above mentioned and in the procurement of an order setting aside the said divorce decree of June 27, 1898, the said Abraham H. Hummel, with intent to deceive the court, acted with full knowledge of the fact that the said action for divorce had been brought with the consent of the defendant Dodge, and that the judgment of divorce had been rendered under testimony supplied by the defendant and that very shortly after the entry of the decree and in the Summer of 1898, the defendant Dodge had received a certified copy of the said decree. Such action on the part of the said Abraham H. Hummel constituted a gross fraud and imposition upon the Supreme Court of the State of New York and a reproach and a scandal to the profession of the law.

The stenographic report of the examination to which Hummel was subjected before the Grand Jury included these questions:

Q.—Did you see Charles W. Morse at your house before you began any proceedings to set aside this divorce which Mrs. Dodge had obtained from her husband? A.—I decline to answer.

Q.—Did you ever receive any money from Charles W. Morse, directly or indirectly, for services rendered in the divorce action of Dodge against Dodge? A.—I decline to answer—I answer "No" to that.

Q.—Was it at your direction that your partner, Mr. Nathaniel Cohen, committed the crime of perjury in the State of Texas? A.—You do Mr. Nathaniel Cohen an injustice when you say he committed the crime of perjury.

Hummel later said he did not believe that Cohen had made an affidavit saying Dodge was not in New York on the date set forth in the indictment for perjury.

Q.—Did a client pay the disbursements of members of your firm in the State of Texas, Mr. Hummel? A.—I refuse to answer who paid their expenses.

Q.—I did not ask you who. I asked you whether it was a client? A.—I have told you that. Yes, Sir.

Q.—Was it Mr. Charles F. Dodge? A.—I decline to answer.

Q.—Isn't it a fact, Mr. Hummel, that at the time you made that motion to set side that decree of divorce you had as an attorney knowledge of the facts which if disclosed to the referee would have defeated your motion? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Isn't it a fact that Mr. Dodge made an affidavit in your office in which he swore that he had himself supplied the evidence upon which that divorce was granted? A.—If there is such an affidavit on file he must have so stated.

Q.—Made in your office, wasn't it? A.—Yes.

Q.—By you? At least drawn by you and sworn to before you? A.—Drawn by Mr. Steinhardt.

Q.—But read by you? A.—More than likely.

Q.—Well, it was, wasn't it? A.—Most likely.

RIVERS SWEEP TOWNS AFTER STORM IN TEXAS

Several Persons Drowned, Bridges and Buildings Wrecked.

RESIDENTS CAMP ON HILLS

All Northern Streams and the Rio Grande Bursting Their Banks—Great Damage to Crops.

Special to The New York Times.

DALLAS, Tex., May 25.—One of the most violent storms of the year passed over Northern Texas to-day. The Trinity, Red, Washita, and Sabine Rivers and their tributaries are flooded and causing damage to exceed $100,000.

The railroad bridge over the Canadian River near Magenta, it is reported, was swept away. The wife and children of a man named Compton were drowned between Magenta and Tascosa. John Ganton was drowned at Cherokee Crossing of Blue River. His wife and two children were rescued.

Nearly twenty dwellings and other buildings were wrecked in Midlothian, Red Oak, Boyce, and Itasca, a row of villages southwest of Dallas. The Christian Church was destroyed at Red Oak and the Cumberland Presbyterian at Boyce. At Itasca cotton mills were unroofed.

At Fort Worth part of the Polytechnic College is in ruins. At Denison a negro school house was demolished and the Eppstein business building was damaged. Six buildings were wrecked at Woodbine. At Rockwell, Wallace's cotton gin and some dwelling houses were destroyed.

Seven bridges over the Sabine and its tributaries were swept away near Marshall, and one over Pool Creek at Rosebud.

The most severe part of the storm extended from the Texas Pan Handle down Red River Valley doing damage in the vicinities of Gainesville, Denison, Paris, and Sherman, and spending its force near Little Rock, Ark. The reported destruction of the town of Chicota is contradicted.

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M., May 25.—The Rio Grande, now almost a mile wide, is flowing through the middle of the village of Tome, twenty miles south of Albuquerque. The 600 inhabitants are camping on the hills and watching as their homes are swept away.

The entire property of the villagers is destroyed, with their crops. Other villages are threatened.

GEO. W. MORGAN VERY ILL.

In Hospital and Will Be Operated On for Appendicitis To-day.

George W. Morgan, State Superintendent of Elections, was taken from his home, 230 West Fiftieth Street, to Roosevelt Hospital, last night, suffering from appendicitis. He will be operated on to-day by Dr. Charles H. Peck, assisted by Dr. Elmore of the United States Navy. Mr. Morgan's condition last night was causing the greatest anxiety to his friends.

He has been under treatment since the last election, when he barely escaped a physical breakdown from overwork. The first diagnosis was erroneous, and it was not until a consultation yesterday that it was determined that appendicitis in an acute form was the ailment from which he was suffering. An immediate operation was then deemed necessary.

A BALTIMORE ROMANCE.

Dr. Davis and Mrs. Apperson, Formerly of Philadelphia, Married.

PHILADELPHIA, May 25.—Mrs. Maria Kane Wetherill Apperson, formerly of this city, was married to-day to Dr. William Alva Davis of Baltimore at that place. Mrs. Davis is a daughter of the late Col. Samuel Wetherill of Bethlehem and a sister of Samuel Price Wetherill and John Price Wetherill of Philadelphia.

Mrs. Davis obtained a divorce from her first husband about seven years ago. While on a visit last Summer at Oxford, Md., she met Dr. Davis, who had just freed himself from his second matrimonial venture.

Dr. Davis married his former wife twice. After they had been divorced once they met again and decided to remarry. Mrs. Davis's parents learned of her intentions, and so strict a watch was set upon her movements that she became practically a prisoner in her own home. But she succeeded in escaping at night, and they were remarried.

FLEUR DE LYS REPORT STIRS UP YACHTSMEN

Idea That Atlantic Could Be in Suggested Position Ridiculed.

THINK BARR'S BOAT LEADS

May Have Been Endymion or Sunbeam—Two More Racers Sighted, but Identity Uncertain.

The report that the Fleur de Lys led the Atlantic in the ocean race, sent by the Minnehaha's wireless through the incoming Teutonic, served to stir up keen interest in the Kaiser Cup yachts yesterday everywhere that the racers are being closest followed. That the Stimson boat was ahead of the Valhalla awoke enthusiasm. The declaration that she had passed the Atlantic aroused the Marshall following thoroughly. A careful study of the conditions convinced them that the Minnehaha was in error, however. But if not the Atlantic, what boat was it that the Fleur de Lys led at midnight Monday?

If the boat was identified by her night signal, it is possible it was the Endymion. Commodore Lauder's boat carries the night signal, red, white, red, Coston lights, which is the nearest approach to the Atlantic's red, blue, red. No other signal approximates it, so the others are eliminated. The Endymion was last heard from when but forty-five hours out. She was then behind the Atlantic a considerable distance and very close to the Fleur de Lys. There is a good chance, therefore, that it was the Indian Harbor boat.

Certainly it could not have been Capt. Barr's schooner. Thirty-three hours before the Atlantic was reported 940 knots out, fully 63 knots north of the Fleur de Lys's position, and proceeding north of east. It is unlikely that she only went 61 knots east in 33 hours and ridiculous to suppose that she ran south in a directly opposite direction from her destination. The Fleur de Lys was still 42 knots south of New York and 1,003 knots due east of the seventy-fourth parallel, or a total of 1,005 knots in direct line. The Atlantic thirty-three hours before was 938 knots east and 21 knots north or 940 knots in direct line.

It would now appear that the Atlantic was certainly about 200 knots ahead of the Fleur de Lys at the time. Valhalla was 37 knots behind, with Endymion or Sunbeam close beside the Stimson boat. The Utowana and Apache were hopelessly benind and probably the Thistle also. Where the Hamburg, Hildegarde, and Ailsa were no one could figure.

Yesterday there were two reports from the yachts in the early morning. One came from the steamer Neckar, which passed a three-masted schooner thought to be Utowana. Her position was longitude 60.43 and latitude 39.48, or 613 knots out. The time, Tuesday, at 6 P. M., was 150 hours. If the identification was correct the Armour boat only made 73 knots in the two days since last heard from and had sailed south 120 knots out of her course, which is manifestly improbable. The Atlantic is the only other three-masted schooner, so it is likely the boat was not a racer.

The other report was from the British steamer Haversham Grange, which passed a two-masted schooner hull down on Sunday, May 21, at 5 P. M. She was described as having two masts of equal height, to carry two gaff topsails of equal size, and an immense spinnaker. The spinnaker had a peculiar square head, with a triangular top added. She was going at great speed before a fair wind.

This description proves it was not the Hamburg. The sails mentioned would suggest the Thistle, which carries a new raffee on her foremast, which just fits the details. If it was the Thistle she had made 300 knots in 31 hours since last spoken, while she had gone south 34 knots in addition. The latitude given is 40.24, and the longitude 55.42, or 845 knots in 101 hours. When last spoken the Thistle was in latitude 41.08 and longitude 64.00, or 540 knots out in 74 hours.

It is possible it was either the Endymion or Hildegarde. It could not well have been the Fleur de Lys, which was only 160 knots further east 31 hours later.

AMERICAN GOLFERS LOSE.

British Women Take International Team Match—Miss Bishop Wins.

LONDON, May 25.—The Ladies' International Golf match, arranged yesterday by the Executive Committee of the Ladies' Golf Union between the British and American women players was played at Cromer to-day and resulted in a British victory. Before the games began the number of competitors was changed to seven on each side and the British won by 6 to 1.

Miss Georgianna Bishop, the present American champion, of Bridgeport, Conn., was the only American woman who won, defeating Miss Lottie Dod, the English champion. The game went to the twentieth hole. Miss May Hezlet, the Irish champion, outclassed Miss Margaret Curtis of Boston, Mass.

Tennis Final Reached in Doubles.

The lawn tennis semi-finals in the doubles provided exciting sport yesterday on the courts of the New York Lawn Tennis Club, Manhattan Avenue and One Hundred and Twenty-third Street. It brought the winning pairs, Wylie C. Grant and Robert Le Roy and Theodore Roosevelt Fell and Arthur T. Friedmann, up to the final and championship round of the tournament, which will be played this afternoon.

Grant and Le Roy, the ex-champion indoor pair, defeated H. W. Warner and J. W. Cunningham in two straight sets by the score 6—4, 6—0. The smashing tactics of Grant and Le Roy outclassed the opposing team, who were unable to make anything like a stand in the final set of the contest.

In the other match Fell and Friedmann defeated Lindley H. Hill and Dr. T. K. Smith by the score of 6-2 and 6-3. This contest was well played and varied between the base-line game and the dashing racquet work of net play.

Invader Wins Class A Trot and Susie G. the Pacing Class.

Invader, the fast bay gelding trotter belonging to Albert Crawford, gave the horses a taste of his speed yesterday on the Speedway. It was in the second matinee brushes of the Road Drivers' Association that the gelding showed the best speed among the Class A competitors. Nathan Straus's Ida Highwood, driven by her owner, got away badly in both heats and disappointed her admirers.

In a measure the honors of the day were divided between Invader and Susie G., J. H. Campbell's black mare, which won in the pacing class. These two horses now top the point winners for the cup offered by Miss Giulia Morosini.

ROCKAWAY WINS IN POLO.

Meadow Brook Defeated in Final Match for Hempstead Cups.

Rockaway's strong polo team defeated the Meadow Brook players yesterday in the final match for the Hempstead cups. The contest was the third in the Meadow Brook Club's tournament for the Hempstead cups, and the club field, near Westbury, L. I., presented a very animated appearance during the progress of the game. The Meadow Brook contingent was out in large numbers, while the Rockaway adherents, notwithstanding the attractions of the Brooklyn Handicap, took over a good delegation from Cedarhurst.

The victors were the stronger team, and allowed the home club three goals by handicap. Deducting this, the losers earned seven goals, while the winners earned just twice that number. In only one period, the third, did the home team show any evidence of outplaying the visitors. Out of six goals made, the home players scored four, but in the final period the Rockaway men put up a defense that could hardly be broken, and allowed Meadow Brook to get but two goals, Beeckman making both.

WANTS 500 CLUBS IN A. A. U.

President Maccabe Making Tour of Country in Interest of Athletics.

Joseph B. Maccabe, President of the Amateur Athletic Union, is fulfilling all the promises he made at the last meeting of the organization, so far as they pertain to increasing the membership. Mr. Maccabe started out some time ago to visit the sectional associations of the union with the view of having 500 clubs on the union's roll of membership before the next annual meeting. His trip to the Southern Association headquarters in Baltimore resulted in a complete reorganization of that association. It has been enlarged from a four-club membership to one of fourteen, and for this President Maccabe has been specially complimented by the Board of Governors of the Amateur Athletic Union.

Next week President Maccabe will visit the Western Association, and from there will go to the Pacific Association and to the Pacific Northwest. On his return he will stop in Chicago in the interest of the Central Association. Upon his visit to the Western Association in St. Louis President Maccabe will make arrangements for an active campaign in that territory, which embraces Missouri, Wyoming, Arkansas, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Indian Territory, Kansas, North Dakota, Kentucky, Nebraska, New Mexico, and Colorado.

After his return from the West, President Maccabe will devote his attention to the Metropolitan Association and to the Atlantic Association.

WHITNEY BOYS PAIR OF PIONEER'S HORSES

Pays Top Price for Coach Leaders at Notable Sale.

SOCIETY ATTENDS AUCTION

Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt and Reginald Rives Show Horses in Durland's Riding Academy.

Society turned out in force at Durland's Riding Academy last night, when thirty-eight coach horses used during the past season for working the Pioneer coach between New York and Ardsley were disposed of under the hammer. The equine beauties had been purchased for the coach by A. G. Vanderbilt, Reginald W. Rives, and G. L. Boissevain as a committee of the Coaching Club, and several bargains were secured.

Harry Payne Whitney secured Philander and Philemon, a splendidly matched pair of geldings, which were contended to be the fastest pair of leaders ever driven to a road coach in the country, for $1,700, while H. F. Eldridge bought four well-mannered horses for $1,800, which was the best bargain of the evening. P. Lorillard paid $1,300 for Pioneer and Pathfinder, a pair of well-mated gray geldings.

The horses were shown by A. G. Vanderbilt and Reginald W. Rives, whose work with the reins materially helped to realize good prices. Forty horses were originally scheduled to be sold, but two were withdrawn owing to sickness. The total sum realized was $16,635, or an average of $437 apiece. Summary:

WEST GETS BILLIARD MEET.

National Amateur Championship Voted to Chicago Athletic Association.

Again the National Amateur Billiard Championship Tournament will be held in Chicago. This was decided upon last night at a meeting of the National Association of Amateur Billiard Players, held at the Liederkranz Club, Fifty-eighth Street, near Park Avenue. Ferdinand Poggenburg, President of the organization, presided at the meeting, which was called principally to take action upon the place of holding the championship of 1906.

The representatives of the Chicago Athletic Association requested that the tournament be held in their club. They reviewed the unfortunate circumstances which befell the meeting last February, in which three of the leading players were obliged to withdraw. After some discussion it was unanimously voted to hold the tournament in Chicago during March, 1906. The Chicago Athletic Association was also agreed upon as the Western headquarters of the National Association, with power to act in the matter of deciding amateur tournaments in that section of the country.

FOR LOWER FIRE RISKS.

Real Estate Men Plan a New and Mutual Company.

At a meeting of the United Real Estate Owners of the City of New York, held last night at Turn Hall, Eighty-fifth Street and Lexington Avenue, steps were taken to form a new fire insurance company on mutual lines in order that the rates, which have been considered too high, may be reduced. The action was taken on the recommendation of a committee of which Dr. H. A. C. Anderson, President of the association, was Chairman.

The plan of the company is for a capital stock of $200,000, with a paid-in surplus of $100,000. The shares of a par value of $10 will be sold at $15 to furnish the surplus. The plan will be a profit-sharing one, or, as it is called, a "participating company," known as the Real Estate Owners' Fire Insurance Company of New York.

LIPTON'S HAPPY REPLY.

Compliments Herreshoff in Accepting Membership in Bristol Yacht Club.

The Bristol (R. I.) Yacht Club, which elected Sir Thomas Lipton an honorary member recently, has received a reply to its notification from the Irish Baronet accepting the compliment in the following happy manner:

"I am pleased to find that my name has been bracketed with N. G. Herreshoff as the only honorary members of the club, as I have a great admiration for Mr. Herreshoff, as well as a very great respect, a respect which has been increasing ever since I found my boats consistently beaten by his skill and ability as a designer and builder of yachts. I have no wish to see his years of usefulness curtailed, but I do wish he would not compress so much of his great talent into the designs of the America Cup defenders."

STORK FLIES OVER CALVARY.

Leaving Two Girls and a Fine Boy for Mr. Cassidy's Neighbors.

Within a stone's throw of Calvary Cemetery, where burials provide most of the excitement, the stork paid a visit yesterday to the home of Michael Newman. Mrs. Newman already had four children. Now she has three more—two girls and a boy.

The mother of the triplets was doing well last evening. Her husband said he was no believer in race suicide.

A short distance from the home of the Newmans, at 42 Gale Street, is the home of Borough President Cassidy. It was said yesterday that the Borough President intended to prove his love for children and happy mothers by sending Mrs. Newman a present. This followed a report that the new Newman boy would be named after the Borough President.

TRAVIS BADLY BEATEN IN GOLF CHAMPIONSHIP

BYERS AMONG THE LOSERS

Surprises were the order of the day yesterday in the match play rounds of the metropolitan golf championship, which was continued on the links of the Fox Hills Golf Club, Staten Island. In the morning E. M. Byers, the gold medal winner on the previous day, was unexpectedly put out of the running by J. M. Rhett of the Crescent Athletic Club, the latter winning a well-played game by 3 up and 2 to play.

As if the surprise was not enough for one day, Walter J. Travis had to join the list of the defeated contestants in the afternoon, his vanquisher being the school lad, Jerome D. Travers of the Nassau Country Club. Travers won by the totally unlooked-for score of 7 up and 6 to play, the worst defeat that Travis has met with since he began to be a champion, and that is many years ago.

The results of the day's play simply show how difficult it is to place anything like reliance upon golfing form when the experts of the game meet. Last week, in the interscholastic championship, Travers, then being the title holder, was beaten, and yet a week later he administers the most crushing defeat to the ex-National and ex-British champion that Travis has known in many a day.

It is an interesting fact, that Travers was the player who beat Travis last Fall in the Nassau tournament. Travis, in fact, was not up to championship form during the day. In the morning he met T. V. Birmingham of the Wykagyl Golf Club and to the surprise of the gallery was one down at the turn. He topped his drive at the tenth hole, falling into the ditch and was two down. He did not get on even terms until the fourteenth hole had been finished, and by hard work Travis managed to win on the seventeenth hole by 2 up and 1 to play.

Travis gave a wretched exhibition of golf in the afternoon. Travers took the lead from the start, winning the first four holes, and at the turn was 4 up. By taking the next three holes in succession he brought the game to a speedy end on the twelfth hole. Travis was very weak in putting, and his all-around game was decidedly below the standard looked for in a champion. The cards are:

Travers, out	5	4	4	5	3	4	5	4	5—39
Travis, out	6	5	5	6	3	5	4	4	5—43
Travis, in	4	5	3	6	5	4	4	4	4—39—78
Travis, in	5	6	5	6	4	4	3	6	4—43—86

The summary:

Championship.—First Round—J. D. Travers, Nassau, beat C. A. Dunning, Nassau, by 6 up and 5 to play; W. J. Travis, Garden City, beat T. V. Birmingham, Wykagyl, by 2 up and 1 to play; P. R. Pyne, Morris County, beat P. W. Kendall, Fox Hills, by 2 up and 1 to play; G. T. Brokaw, Garden City, beat D. O'Connor, Fox Hills, by 1 up; C. H. Seeley, Wee Burn, beat Harold Wilcox, Montclair, by 2 up; J. R. Maxwell, Jr., Nassau, won by default from John Smith, Powelton; E. C. Knapp, Fox Hills, beat L. H. Thomas, Richmond County, by 7 up and 5 to play; J. M. Ward, Fox Hills, beat L. P. Runyon, Fox Hills, by 3 up and 2 to play; H. L. Downey, Apawamis, beat H. J. Gee, Princeton, by 3 up and 3 to play; C. W. O'Connor, Essex County, beat W. B. Rhett, Crescent, by 3 up and 2 to play; F. W. Gwyer, Siwanoy, beat C. R. Gillet, Wykagyl, by 1 up; A. GOVERNMENT BY INSURRECTION.

Mayor WEAVER will win, because he must win, the fight he has so courageously begun against the corrupt ring controlling the Philadelphia City Government. Any other result than a victory for Mayor WEAVER, a victory for the right and the overthrow of the robbers, is inconceivable. The City of Philadelphia has a population exceeding 1,300,000 souls. The vast majority of its people, of course, are honest and law-abiding. They do not admire or sympathize with thieves. Certainly they do not sympathize with thieves who are trying to filch money from their pockets, which is precisely what the ring is trying to do by forcing the improvident gas lease through the City Councils again over the Mayor's veto. The people of a great city will let themselves be robbed by gas thieves and other thieves sometimes for years. The people of Philadelphia have been brought up standing by the revelation of the boundless audacity of the official ringsters and the gas company folk who are prompting them. The city is aroused to a high pitch of anger, and to something more than anger. In the addresses and resolutions of public meetings recently held in Philadelphia there is a note too frequently absent from reform demonstrations—the note of an inflexible resolve to carry the thing through to the end at any cost, and by whatever methods may be necessary.

The public enemies against whom the city's wrath has been provoked are few in number. They are strong only in the possession of office. Mayor WEAVER'S first move in the fight indicates that they will be got out of office as rapidly and in such numbers as the law permits and public interest requires. Honest men will be put in their places, and then the rights and the interests of the people will be safeguarded.

There are two impediments to the policy the Mayor has entered upon. The first is the courts. Judge RALSTON promptly enjoined Mayor WEAVER'S appointees to the offices from which he had removed two of the ringsters. The injunctions perhaps ought to have been issued. An honest Judge might have issued them. A ring Judge would of course have issued them. Still the law declares that the Mayor of Philadelphia "may by written order, to be transmitted to Select Council, giving his reasons therefor, remove from office any head of department, Director, or other officer appointed by him." A Judge who had taken the view that this is purely an executive matter, in which any interference of the judiciary save for the gravest reasons would be unwarranted, would have won popular applause and might have found himself in a sound legal position. Some of the Judges in Philadelphia are looked on with suspicion. But Judges of the Supreme Court have granted a writ of supersedeas which removes Judge RALSTON'S injunctions, and pending further inquiry by the Supreme Bench Mayor WEAVER'S appointees have taken possession of the offices of the Director of Public Safety and the Director of Public Works, the incumbents holding them under the injunction being got out of the way by a show of force. As it is difficult to make an enlightened people believe that the law invariably requires the courts to baffle the right and sustain the wrong, we should say that Mayor WEAVER might confidently expect a final triumph in the legal contest.

The other impediment in Mayor WEAVER'S path is the threat of the ring to impeach him. The attempt to do that would be the worst mistake the ringsters could make, because anybody can see that it would be highly dangerous for the thieves to presume too much upon the continuance of that spirit of brotherly love which has given the city its name. When laws have failed people have sometimes taken the law into their own hands for good ends, and have accomplished them with exemplary completeness. Signs are not wanting that if all other means fail the people of Philadelphia will adopt methods that will bring even the ring thieves to their senses. It is for that reason, among others, that we confidently predict the triumph of Mayor WEAVER.

The spectacle is highly edifying and encouraging. It is the insurrection of an enthralled people against their ruling officials sufficiently serious to embarrass bosses. Mayor WEAVER himself has risen in insurrection against his political creators, to their unbounded astonishment. In every city in the land upon which political commercialism has set its grip men will take courage and be emboldened to declare and achieve their independence. To be sure there are few cities where corruption has been so flagrant and so audacious. The new lease of the gas works and franchises to the United Gas Improvement Company for seventy-five years for $25,000,000 may fairly be called a $100,000,000 steal. The city will lose under the new lease as compared with the present lease $13,000,000, and possession of the gas works for eighty years is to all intents and purposes a transfer of ownership to the gas company. The steal is big enough to rouse in the breasts of any community an ugly determination to thwart it. The lease has yet to be passed in the Councils over the Mayor's veto. Mayor WEAVER evidently hopes to unnerve the ring and their tools in the Councils by smiting them in the very citadel of their power. The two public officers whom he has removed had control over practically three-fourths of the administrative work of the City Government, including the Police and Fire Departments and all public works. The control of the police is all-important to the ring, since if it passes to other hands frauds upon the ballot can be practiced only at great risk.

It is a very real deliverance of the city that Mayor WEAVER has undertaken, and he shows magnificent courage in undertaking it.

THE NAVAL SITUATION.

It is denied from St. Petersburg, and not affirmed from Tokio, that the Japanese have cut the Siberian Railroad so as to isolate Vladivostok. There is nothing impossible about such a feat. Doubtless a Japanese raid might effect it at almost any time. But it would be of no military advantage unless it were effected with an intention of maintaining the isolation. For that purpose we have no reason for believing that the Japanese operations are far enough advanced. It seems probable that the report is premature, though in no other way incredible.

Meanwhile it seems to be fairly clear that the combined Russian squadrons, the junction of which the Japanese Admiral has so conspicuously omitted to make any attempt to prevent, have made their way eastward between Luzon and Formosa. They have thus distinctly evaded the decisive battle for which they have been supposed to be yearning, and which they might certainly have had if they had taken the straight course for their destination by the Formosa Strait, then by the Korea Strait. By so doing they have avoided encountering the Japanese fleet in water of its own choosing and preparation. If ROJESTVENSKY considers the Japanese force superior to his own, it may be said that they have put off the evil day.

But they have encountered a new set of difficulties. For they must re-enter the Japan Sea to gain Vladivostok. Practically, they must do this by the Tsugaru Strait, between the Japanese Islands of Nippon and Yezo or by the La Perouse Strait, between Yezo and Sakhalin. The latter course is a very wide circuit for a fleet chronically in need of coal. The former has already been proclaimed within the Japanese zone of defense and neutral commerce warned away from it, which of course means that it is protected by mines as well as by torpedo boats. True, it is ten miles wide. But the western end of it is much more accessible to TOGO than the eastern to ROJESTVENSKY. The task of guiding safely the Russian ships, including the various impedimenta of no fighting capacity, through this strait, with such pilotage as a hostile foreigner can obtain, and in spite of all the obstacles that a vigilant enemy can put in his way, is one to discourage any naval commander.

And then there is the certainty that, when such of his ships as escape the dangers of the passage emerge on the western side, the side of the Asiatic mainland, the Japanese ships will be awaiting him there and will have him at a distinct disadvantage. No naval officer can possibly envy the Russian Admiral his "job."

ALIEN CONTRACT LABOR.

The order of the Canadian court directing the deportation of the Superintendent and ten other officials of the Père Marquette Railroad as aliens brought into the country under labor contracts in violation of the law of the Dominion is logical enough, and serves its purpose as an illustration by means of the reductio ad absurdum of the kind of legislation cited. We had the same question raised once in this country in the case of a prominent minister who had come to this city to accept a call to the pastorate of an important church, and without doubt the contention that he was an alien contract laborer would have been sustained had any one been interested in pressing the matter. Fortunately, the spirit of organization along the lines of modern trades unionism has not yet gained much headway among clergymen. We have had it exemplified a number of times in the cases of musicians engaged abroad to perform in "American" orchestras, of which probably not one member was a native of the country. Any attempt on the part of the courts to discriminate between one kind of labor and another when the contract labor law is involved presents difficulties sufficiently serious to embarrass a Judge who lacks the courage to render an arbitrary decision and take the chances of being reversed on appeal. Perhaps as good a line as could be drawn would be at assisted immigration. An immigrant who knows what he is to do when he reaches this country, and who is wanted for a specific service, is per se no more objectionable than one who comes here looking for a "job," which he may not find right away; but if he could not have come at all if his passage had not been prepaid and his living en route provided for, it is a fair assumption that his coming does not represent the spontaneous movement of population in obedience to natural law.

THE IRON MARKET.

The developments of the past fortnight in the iron markets may easily be misinterpreted. It is quite possible in circumstances such as exist to have a current consumption of finished material, especially steel, so great as to tax productive facilities to the breaking point, and to have at the same time a quiet pig iron market, with an increasing stock in first hands. This accumulation of unsold and unengaged pig iron is statistically unimportant. As a matter of fact, it might be much greater than it is now or is likely to be, without warranting any uneasiness. The current consumption of pig iron is unprecedented, but so is production. The buying on which deliveries are now making was great enough to permit a falling off in the volume of new business in anticipation of the hot weather of early Summer, which has not yet been felt generally, or, to a seasonable extent, even locally. It is possible that the foundry industry, which largely depends upon the iron made by the merchant furnaces, has not realized expectations this Spring, but if so these expectations were somewhat extravagant.

The Iron Age is still of the opinion that the maximum of pig iron production has been passed. Very likely this is true, and the natural result will be that a number of the less advantageously located furnaces will be blown out before midsummer and await a recovery of prices to a point which will encourage resumption. As to the business in finished products the same authority says:

> The buying and the consumption in the heavy lines are very great, and promise to continue, to judge from the orders booked and the new tonnage coming up. In the lighter lines, distributed chiefly by the jobbing trade, the merchants bought late last year and early this year, and bought heavily in anticipation of the Spring demand, tempted by low prices. The mills, therefore, were rushed and are still busy, either making deliveries or accumulating the usual stocks. The Summer dullness has been, therefore, transferred to the Spring.

It should be remembered that the labor situation does not yet warrant confidence in the wisdom of undertaking at the moment anything in the way of building operations which can be postponed. The peace which now exists in the building trades is one of extremely unstable equilibrium. There must at all times be a good deal of building of one kind or another, but the demand for steel for this purpose is materially less than it would be if the modus vivendi in the building trades could be replaced by a relation in the stability of which there was general belief. However, the situation is far from disquieting.

SCHOOL HOURS AND "FADS."

What we may call the technical staff of the public school system has been sustained, in a manner that must be very gratifying to Superintendent MAXWELL, on two separate questions upon which his critics and opponents had taken issue as presumably the questions on which they had the best chance of defeating him. Although separate, the two issues are related. One of them is the proposal for a shorter school day in the elementary schools. The other is for the abolition of what are described as "fads" in elementary teaching, "fads" apparently including all studies but the traditional "three R's."

The propositions are connected in this way. It is complained, and with reason, that five hours are too long a space to keep the attention of young children awake and keen upon any set of studies. If the "fads" were dispensed with, then, say the advocates of a shorter school day, children could make as much progress in the three R's as they make now in an hour and a half less of time. But the supporters of the actual curriculum respond that the effect of the "fads" is precisely to divert and thus to rest the minds of the children, which are kept strained by the regular studies. Hence the advocates of the shorter day are the advocates of the abolition of the fads, and the advocates of the fads the advocates of keeping the present schedule of school hours.

One question came up before the Committee on Elementary Schools of the Board of Education, and that committee reported against shortening the hours of attendance now required, after giving public hearings in all the boroughs. The full board, though technically postponing the question, has in effect adopted the report of the committee. That is the end of that matter. The other question came up at a hearing held on Wednesday evening by the Committee on Studies and Textbooks. The protestants against the abolition of the "fads" were so much more numerous than the abolitionists, and their arguments so much more cogent, that the advocates of a change were overwhelmed. It was made clear that the opinions of those who, by special study [illegible] and inquiry, have a right to an opinion, were so nearly unanimous against any change that the committee cannot in decency help reporting against a change. Parents who have been unable to pay any special attention to the subject for themselves may, it appears, safely rely upon the judgment of those better informed, and conclude that the pedagogic department of the public schools is in very good hands. The proceedings at the two meetings amounted to two votes of confidence in Superintendent MAXWELL and his methods.

POLICE RAIDS.

The somewhat intemperate obiter dicta of Judge GAYNOR in denouncing the efforts of the police to suppress crime by means of raids will scarcely commend themselves to the sober judgment of the law-abiding citizen. There is much less gambling in New York now than there was when Mr. JEROME began his raids against places concerning which evidence satisfactory to the courts could not be had in any other way. Some of the most dangerous gamblers have been driven out of the city and their places permanently closed. These are results of public benefit.

There would be more warrant for Judge GAYNOR'S severe strictures upon the police if they were in the habit of arbitrarily exercising their power to break through the barriers which hide crime from the kind of observation which would make the gathering of evidence much easier than it now is. As it is, we do not recall any instance of a raid so widely misdirected that what it looked for was not there. They have sometimes failed, but this was usually, if not invariably, because the persons to be raided had been tipped off and enabled to convert a poolroom into a place of lawful assemblage. It will delight every person engaged in occupations prohibited by law to read the following from Judge GAYNOR'S decision granting the motion of CULLEN, whose store has been watched, for an injunction restraining Acting Captain BOURKE from further interfering with him:

> If it be asked, "What is to be done if no evidence can be obtained?" the answer of the law is emphatic, "Do nothing." The law does not permit even a murderer to be molested without evidence. The meaning of free government is that no one may be molested or arrested except in the way prescribed by law. Upon this alone does free government rest. This is well understood everywhere outside of the City of New York except in archaic despotisms, such as Russia. Where officials do as they like free government does not exist.

This scarcely indicates a judicial frame of mind. The citizen who is not open to well-founded suspicion does not often, if ever, need to go to court for an injunction to restrain the police from interfering with him. He can accomplish that object much more easily.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Why Not Have an "Army Department"?

Information is wanted by The Richmond (Va.) Times-Dispatch. Why, it asks, should the United States Government cling to an old designation and call one of its departments "the Department of War"? Perhaps the simplest answer to this question is that, as a matter of fact, no department is so designated, but, of course, there really is a "War Department," and the difference is immaterial so far as regards the point The Times-Dispatch might have made if it had not run off into vagaries like the following: "There has been no war in the United States for forty years, and there is no probability that there will be a war within the next forty years. Yet we have our 'Department of War,' as though we were at enmity with the rest of the world and on the hunt for a fight. We are not a warlike Nation. We are a Nation of peace, and we should not have a 'Department of War.' We do not call the navy a war department, yet the forces in the navy are, if anything, more warlike than the soldiers of the interior. Our so-called 'War Department' should be called the 'Military Department.' Has this question ever before been raised?" Not that we recall—possibly because, as put, there is so little in it. Much less than forty years ago we had a war that would have been "in the United States" if our antagonists had been able to place it there, and such muddling as our War Department did in convincing them of the impossibility was due to something else than the inaccuracy of its name, real or imagined. But it would be a fair question to ask why we have a "Navy Department," and, instead of a corresponding "Army Department," one that takes the statelier title of "War Department." Army and navy are alike the tools with which Congress and the President wage war in what seem to them to be cases of necessity, and there doesn't appear to be much sense in an empty differentiation of them, but "War Department" indicates not a bit more of "enmity with the rest of the world" than "Army Department" or "Military Department" would or than "Navy Department" does. And our neighbor should remember that there are few less profitable occupations than arguing about the accuracy and propriety of names. Anything is well named when its name is understood by all, and any name that all understand is good unless it is offensive. Most things have to be named before they are thoroughly comprehended and all their uses and relations ascertained, and it is rarely worth while to abandon an old name simply because a new one would seem theoretically better.

Some Advice for the Waiters.

Not even the harshest critic of names could find any fault, at least for lack of careful accuracy, though it might have been a little more explicit, with that of the "Head, Second, and Side Waiters' National Benefit Association of America," which is holding its eighth annual convention in Pittsburg this week. All that the delegates have left out of their organization's title is the fact that they are all men who wear the livery of the sun in addition to such other uniforms as their employers may supply or demand, but perhaps they find it a relief to forget that fact once in a while, and who can blame them? Among the many important topics which the head, second, and side waiters are to discuss is the tipping system, and one may think that a majority of them will have the manliness and good sense to express a vehement detestation of the evil thing and an eager desire to get into the class of workers who live on honest wages instead of on blackmail only slightly mitigated. It is discouraging to note, however, that Mr. HENRY JONES, the Secretary of the convention and an influential member of the society, has already been talking in defense of tips and tip-taking and betraying complete lack of the ability to understand what it is that has put the waiter, black and white, on a far lower level in popular esteem than that occupied by many men who do work requiring far less of training, skill, and intelligence. Let the tipping question alone, says the pathetically misguiding and misguided Mr. JONES; the proprietors of hotels and restaurants do not pay their waiters living wages, and if the tipping system were abolished the waiters would be tempted to give short change. That's an amazing argument—just about such an argument as might safely be expected from a believer in tips. Other leaders in the convention are demanding the establishment of a fixed scale of tips, to be paid by every patron to every waiter who serves him, the percentage suggested being a tenth of the amount paid to the proprietor and no escape for anybody. That would be an improvement in a way, and especially in the way that it would instantly overthrow the tipping system, since a fixed charge that everybody must pay is not a tip in any sense of the word, but merely an advance in prices. The remedy, however, is roundabout and silly. The right thing for the waiters to do is to stiffen up their self-respect, if they have any, or to acquire some if they haven't, and to take the united stand that wages are good enough for them and they good enough for wages. That would bring the proprietors instantly to time, and all who have to eat at public tables would be spared participation in a detestable and disgusting practice.

Coming Far for His Advice.

It is indeed cruelly significant of the state of things political in Philadelphia that Mayor WEAVER has had to come to New York to get legal advice in addition to that supplied by his own personal counsel. The phrase "Philadelphia lawyer" has gained from tradition and experience an implication of especial and peculiar shrewdness for those to whom it applies, and therefore it is quite certain that what the Mayor went so far to get was not ability he could not find at home, but men who could be trusted neither to fear nor to favor the public enemies with whom the Mayor is now having a life-and-death struggle. The necessity to do so imposes a serious handicap on him, for he is deprived of the assistance he ought to receive from lawyers more deeply versed in the peculiarities of the Pennsylvania statutes than any New York lawyers, however able, are likely to be, and from those who have followed closely for years past the municipal history of Philadelphia. When asked the reason for his course, the Mayor only smiled; he might better have wept and then perhaps even the Philadelphia lawyers would have blushed at the terrible reflection upon their—well, let us be charitable and say their courage.

Has Full Confidence in Mr. Rockefeller

To the Editor of The New York Times:

An artice in THE TIMES yesterday was headed "Rev. Herbert S. Johnson of Boston heads movement to reject gifts of Mr. Rockefeller." While I am a Baptist preacher, and am fairly well acquainted with the ministers of our denomination, I must admit I never heard of this Baptist brother, yet I suppose he is known in his neighborhood at least, but am sure he does not possess influence to head any large movement of the kind he mentions. He can doubtless get those who have applied in vain to Mr. Rockefeller for assistance, and with whom it is a case of "sour grapes," or those who know nothing of Mr. Rockefeller and his earnest life, but who accept as true the malicious falsehoods which have been circulated by his enemies.

I am sure I voice the sentiment of the Baptist preachers who know Mr. Rockefeller, when I say I believe Mr. Rockefeller to be an earnest Christian gentleman, an honest business man, and one who is doing that which he believes to be well pleasing to God.

It is doubtless true that among the vast interests he controls there are men in his employ who descend at times to means which are not what they ought to be, but Mr. Rockefeller cannot always avoid this.

I venture to say that Mr. Rockefeller is as good a Christian as the best in the Rev. H. S. Johnson's Church, and his money as clean as any of the business men of that church, and perhaps if the Rev. Johnson would investigate the finances of his own people he might begin his work nearer home.

If the Rev. H. S. Johnson secures a list of Baptist preachers, you will find, if you investigate, they belong to either one of the two factors mentioned above.

Credit Due to Mr. Willcox.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Knowing the love THE TIMES has for veracity, and that it is willing to print only that that is fit to publish, one may conclude that the truth is the only thing fit to print.

The first attention ever paid to gathering a list of the public monuments in this city was made in this office during the administration of Mr. Willcox as Commissioner of Parks.

In a letter to this department from the Art Commission, dated Jan. 19, 1905, the commission requested a copy of the catalogue made in this department.

In the reply from this department, Feb. 12, 1905, acknowledgment was made of the favor received from the Art Commission, with the suggestion that they make a more complete list and add to it more data.

There is no desire to detract in the least from the useful work now being done by this commission, but to simply state a fact.

Newspaper Anonymity.

In a recent speech delivered before the Newspaper Society in London, Winston Churchill, M. P., said that while newspaper machinery every day expanded, the men who did the work seemed to him to have sunk somewhat into the background in our great social hierarchy. It was not so in France. In many ways the press of France was inferior to ours, but there were powerful individual journalists in France as there were not in England—men who wielded a power in directing the course of the policy of their country much greater than that wielded by the average member of the Chamber of Deputies. It was a great pity that individual journalists had not the same influence at home. It was certainly not because we did not possess writers of equal capacity. He ventured to think that anonymity had a great deal to do with it. If more articles were signed, individual journalists would acquire a greater weight and authority in the politics of the country.

Better Drunk Than Eaten.

From The London Globe.

A story with a moral comes from Uganda. A lion, thinking it about time to lunch, seized a white man and bit him. His teeth went through a bottle of whisky which the man was carrying in his pocket, and this gave him such a shock that he turned tail. The moral is obvious. Do not to be a teetotaler. If the man had been a teetotaler he would have been eaten. It is better to be drunk than eaten.

Servant—Because artists are less troublesome. They never want their rooms put in order.

GOV. MAGOON INAUGURATED.

PANAMA, May 25.—Judge Hezekiah A. Gudger this morning administered the oath of office to Charles G. Magoon, Governor of the canal zone, in the Ancon district. The inauguration ceremony took place in the presence of President Amador and the Cabinet, Señor de Obaldia, Ministetr to the United States; the Diplomatic and Consular Corps, and prominent native and foreign residents.

Gov. Magoon, in his inaugural speech, said the reorganization of the Canal Commission had resulted in the centralization of authority and the transfer of power from Washington to Panama, enabling more energy to be put into the work of construction. He announced that Chief Engineer Wallace had completed the plan of organization, and added that the railroad would be double-tracked, that rates would be reduced, and that the docking facilities at Panama and Colon would be increased and extended equally to all steamship companies.

Regarding sanitation the Governor said that no efforts and no expense would be spared to make the zone healthy. He also announced that the number of Judges in the zone would be increased, that a jurist of Panama would be appointed a member of the Supreme Court, and that numerous schools would be opened.

WHY IS HE NOT OPPOSED?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Can you not through the medium of your columns rouse some one with money enough to expend a few hundred dollars in the laudable purpose of squelching the bellowings and frothings of that arch blatherskite in Boston, who periodically slops over in the newspapers to the end that hysterically nervous persons are led to sacrifice their hard-earned savings on the altar of false alarms?

It does seem a thousand pities that one man possessing the talent for lurid and really fanatical advertising should go on week after week putting forth his poisonous vaporings with no one to take up the cudgels to expose his falseness.

Wall Street knows him for what he is—a fakir—but the world is not all in Wall Street, and his outpourings reach the people at large, many of whom are misled to their great financial loss.

Is there no law to punish a man for distorting the truth to the intentional injury of corporations' security values? He has no defenders in financial circles, but why has he no antagonists bold and strong enough to publicly refute his fallacies?

HOW TO AVOID BITTERNESS.

A Southerner Objects to the Assertion That the South Was Wrong.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In reply to your correspondent, "E. S.," in Monday's issue of THE TIMES, permit me to say that he asks and expects the utterly impossible of the South in his brief communication. No people having fought for what they believed and conceived to be right can ever admit because defeated by overwhelming numbers that their cause was wrong—numbers can conquer and silence by force of arms, but principles are invincible, unconquerable, and eternal; they may be voluntarily abandoned forever by the conquered for the sake of priceless peace, but such abandonment does not imply a cause was wrong.

To stop bitterness concerning a war waged forty-odd years ago, if there is really any in the hearts of the majority of the people North or South, let the schools and the history taught therein cease to pervert, to impugn, and to belittle the duty and the motive that moved, inspired, prompted, and actuated the South and her chosen leaders in the mighty conflict that shook the world to its centre. Write impartial history based upon the "res gestae" attending the formulation and adoption of our Federal organic law and the teachings handed down from the foundation of the Government, as is to be found in "Elliott's Debates," The Federalist, and the writings of the statesmen of early formative days, and as they were expounded by the leading statesmen North and South, to their people or constituents. Then and only then will bitterness cease to be, when fairness reigns where prejudice now rules and warps the better instincts and judgment of the men and women who will not read both sides of a question, but permit others to think for them.

The South does not inculcate nor does she instill bitterness into the hearts of her children, but with a pride of spirit and a courageousness born of an undying love of independence, liberty, and freedom of speech, she asks that the textbooks used in the schools of this Republic give clearly and concisely the gist of the constitutional principles and traditional teachings that swayed the citizens of this bright land and drove them to deluge her fertile soil with fratricidal blood in order that our children may see that both sides battled for what God in His infinite wisdom allowed them to believe right.

A Case of Troubled Conscience.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

On taking my seat in an Interborough car recently I found that I had omitted to deposit my ticket in the chopper's box. My first impulse was to deposit it on arriving at the station to which I was going, but I recollected that about two years ago I had been stalled in a car belonging to the Interborough, and, after waiting about twenty minutes, had got out and asked the ticket agent for the return of my fare. He refused, and did so, as I recollect, with much rudeness. Nor would he vouchsafe any explanation for his refusal.

So I have kept the ticket. Am I justified? I do not wish to be guilty of petty larceny myself, nor do I wish to be the victim of the petty larceny of the Interborough.

Would Have Furniture Dated.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I would like to make a suggestion to manufacturers in general, but furniture dealers in particular. It is to date every piece of furniture that is made, and where it is made, and by whom. Also all kinds of china and ornaments.

They could be marked on the underside, and in such a manner that time could not efface.

The King's Gloved Hand.

From The London Chronicle.

It was noticed in Paris, when King Edward was there, that he always appeared in public with his right hand gloved, but not his left. As it is a common practice to carry the right glove loose, and not the left, much speculation has been excited by the King's reversal of this custom. One learned writer suggests that it is due to a sound perception of hygienic propriety. The object of a glove, he says, is not to adorn, but to protect the hand. Which hand has the more constant employment, and is therefore brought into closer contact with microbes? Why, the right hand. It follows that in keeping that hand gloved the King shows his unfailing sense. Vive le Roi!

A SOCRATES FOR ST. PAUL.

The second lunette, designed by Mr. John La Farge for the Supreme Court in the State House at St. Paul, Minn., is so nearly finished that the artist is showing it to friends and a few selected members of the press in the Vanderbilt Gallery at the Fine Arts Building on West Fifty-seventh Street. The first was "Moses on Mount Sinai," shown last Winter. The present is "Socrates Discussing 'The Republic' with His Friends." A third will be "Confucius and His Disciples," and the fourth, "Raymond of Toulouse Swearing to Observe the Liberties of the City." These four lunettes take their shape from the form of the room, which has a dome and vaulted roofs at right angles to each other, forming a cross with the dome in the centre. The lunette now shown may receive some touches in the Vanderbilt Gallery, where the top light, though very different from that in the place where the great canvas will be fixed to the wall, is stronger and more generally diffused than in the painter's studio.

A classic subject naturally demands a classic composition, and the artist has distributed his figures as carefully as the old French painters used to do, when classicism was the end and aim of art. From Alcibiades (so we may call him) seated luxuriously on the semi-circular bench to the left, round to the dancing girl with tambourine who leans on the end of the bench-back, far off to the right, the heads of seated and standing figures follow an inner curve that does not tally with, but yet forms a shallow arch within, the arch of the lunette. Socrates wears a white robe with violet shadows. The man who stands leaning his armpit on a long staff in the attitude familiar through reliefs on tombstones at Athens is draped in red, and red is the body garment of the man driving three white horses abreast, who appears to be approaching in a high chariot the place of discourse. The languid seated youth on the left, to whom perhaps Socrates addresses one of his famous "posers," wears ample draperies of bronzy yellow, while the youth somewhat apart, whose head and shoulders are in the foreground, rising above the back of the bench, wears a brilliant blue cloak. There are six figures here, very cleverly disposed about the half-moon canvas, three horses in the background on the right and the lower part of a draped female statue on a pedestal to the left rear.

The general idea of this scene is the relation of the individual to the State; and we may suppose, if we wish, that Socrates is discussing with three friends, one standing at rest, two seated, the topics which he is made by Plato to consider in "The Republic." What may be of more importance to the picture as a part of the decoration of the Supreme Court room is the fact that by the introduction of ample and agreeable architectural motives and the quiet he has imposed on all the figures he has made a design particularly adapted to a neo-classical interior. How the color-scheme is going to suit, nobody can say; perhaps not the artist himself, until he sees the canvas in place.

Yet it is the color scheme which takes a painting or glass window by John La Farge out of any former period and stamps it as modern and his own. In this case, as in the "Moses on Sinai," the colors are like trumpets blown; they fairly crush the senses, and one feels like going aside for a while and then returning in order to do them justice. The masses of green leaves above the heads of the chief figures; the climbing roses on the bench to the left that with their wealth of color balance the figure of the girl with tambourine to the right; the vivid blue note directly in the centre front are driven home with a vigor that makes one wonder how the surroundings of this lunette are to stand its powerful but never discordant notes. And as the color-scheme is the most important element, so the design alone in black and white, masterly as it is, fails to reach such levels. It is very interesting, well-pondered, easy, and handsome; but it is the untranslatable color-scheme that will always fascinate the beholder.

Rojestvensky's Complaint.

From The Paris Matin.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 12.—This acute question of neutrality, the cause of several diplomatic troubles, in France and even in Japan, the echoes of which only reach here very much attenuated, has not been made the occasion by certain organs of the St. Petersburg press and by administrative circles for showing us a little gratitude and even politeness. Everybody is complaining, and the first to make his voice heard is Rojestvensky. "I can never stop," he telegraphs, in reply to the objurgations addressed to him by the General Staff, "in French territorial waters. So soon as I entered any harbor, the French authorities drove me out of it, and I had to move further on, where the same ill-luck attended me."

The Admiral asserts that he is not the only one who has provisioned in neutral or quasi-neutral waters. He accuses Admiral Dewey's torpedo boats of receiving coal either from the Dutch, from the Americans in the Philippines, or from the British at Amoy. He also states that the Japanese did not hesitate to establish a wireless telegraphic station at Amoy for communication between that place and Formosa, while the enemy's cruisers and torpedo boats were continually traveling to and fro. It is believed at the General Staff that the junction has already taken place, and a decisive move northward, which Admiral Rojestvensky will not attempt to conceal, is expected. He is ready to fight if the occasion presents itself, and, indeed, seeks rather than avoids a fight.

Mounet-Sully Overcome.

From The London Chronicle.

A story of M. Mounet-Sully. Some little while ago he visited Greece, and when he saw the Parthenon he was overcome with emotion. Surrounded by poets, artists, and archæologists, he suddenly dropped upon his knees, and then lay full length, kissed the dust twice, and cried, "Holy ground! Holy ground!" His companions gazed at him respectfully, much impressed by this homage to the soil. As they were about to quit the scene, M. Mounet-Sully detained them by a gesture. They thought he was going to make a speech; but to their surprise he dropped to earth again, and kissed it fervently anew. Then he rose and uttered the simple words, "That is for my brother!"

RAIN.

The Rain came down on the brown
Rich furrows of mountain farms
And rivers with silver arms:
The cooled earth lifted a grateful scent;
The cornblades rustled in merriment;
The cutworm made him a leafy tent,
The hemlock tassels were pearled.
Then, soft through fillets, of vapor spun,
The drops fell lazily, one by one;
A bluebird fluted to greet the sun;
A bow bent over the world.

The Rain came down on the town:
In floods, in torrents, in sheets
It swept the feverish streets.
A million lances of silver gray
It broke on steeples in stern array;
It veiled the cornice with wreaths of spray;
The big drops spattered the pane,
Then ceased. But gardens that late had been
So parched and thirsty, were fresh and green,
And all was wholesome and cool and clean
For blest is ever the Rain.

ARTHUR GUITERMAN.

HIGGINS TO BE ASKED TO EXCLUDE HOTEL BAR

Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church to Send Protesting Committees.

NEW GOTHAM IS OPPOSITE

Saxe Bill Is Said to Have Been Passed to Allow the Sale of Liquor There.

Committees representing the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church will go to Albany to-day to plead with Gov. Higgins not to sign the Saxe Bill, which they assert was introduced solely for the purpose of legalizing liquor selling at the new Hotel Gotham. The hotel is on Fifty-fifth Street directly opposite the church.

The congregation of the church had a hard fight only a few months ago, when it was sought to prevent the granting of a liquor license to the St. Regis, which is on the southeast corner of Fifty-fifth Street and Fifth Avenue. The church is on the northwest corner and there was a question whether the distance from the church to the entrance of the hotel was 200 feet, as the law provides it must be to permit the granting of a license to sell liquor. The St. Regis finally obtained a license.

The Gotham, which has been practically completed for months, but not occupied, is separated from the church by only the width of the street.

It was not understood how the proprietors proposed to get a liquor license until the Saxe bill was introduced and rushed through the Legislature in the last days of the session. The Saxe bill proposes to amend the Raines law by providing that a hotel may sell liquor within 200 feet of a church if it has at least 200 rooms for guests.

The church will send two committees to represent it at the hearing before the Governor this afternoon. Of these one represents the Board of Elders. This is composed of James Talcott and Silas B. Brownell. The other committee which was appointed by the Board of Trustees is composed of A. G. Agnew, James H. Schmeizel, and Noah C. Rogers. All are prominent members of the church and the majority are lawyers.

The committees will urge the Governor to veto the Saxe bill on a number of grounds, which were set forth in a formal written protest which was sent to the Governor several days ago. Among other things it is declared that the signing of the Saxe bill would be against the policy of the State to preserve the orderly peace and quiet for all classes of citizens in their attendance and worship in their churches. It is further urged that it is special legislation directed against the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church alone, and in favor of big hotels.

"It legalizes in a big hotel on Fifth Avenue," says the protest, "what is a crime in a small hotel on the Bowery and Grand Street."

The protest was signed by Mr. Brownell for the session and by A. G. Agnew and Edgar S. Auchincloss for the trustees.

It did not prevent the passage of the bill, but caused Senator Saxe to denounce the measure and to refuse to vote for it. Senator Elsberg, who had asked Senator Saxe to introduce the bill, did not vote for it.

The trustees of the church have sent to every minister in the city for signatures for a petition asking the Governor to veto the bill.

Henry R. Holt, President of the Fifty-fifth Street Real Estate Company, which owns the Hotel Gotham, said last night his company would not be represented at the hearing. He refused to comment on the Saxe bill or on the protest of the church trustees.

TRIBUNE DINES MR. REID.

A Family Gathering to Say Good-Bye to the New Ambassador.

The series of banquets in honor of Ambassador Whitelaw Reid before his departure for England ended last night with the dinner at the Hotel Astor, given by the members of the staff of The New York Tribune, of which he was formerly editor. The affair was a family gathering where no speeches were reported. The Apolo Club furnished the music.

Instead of the ordinary spoken grace the singers observed the custom that has been observed in England on state occasions by singing the grace entitled "Non Nobis Domini." Henry E. Krehbiel, the musical critic of The Tribune, arranged for the musical programme, there being music after each course. It was not altogether Wagnerian, but distinctly classic, rag-time being eliminated. After the speechmaking was over the singers pronounced a vocal benediction, "Ecce Quam Bonum."

Hart Lyman presided, and the diners sat at a round table, so that there might be no question of precedence. Mr. Lyman extended the congratulations and the good wishes of the staff to Mr. Reid. Mr. Reid made a fitting response. The other speakers were Admiral Clarence Stedman, James Marvin, H. E. Krehbiel, Col. Henry W. Sackett, Royal Cortissoz, Nathaniel Tuttle, and H. N. Kellogg.

Mr. and Mrs. Choate at Royal Ball.

LONDON, May 25.—Princess Henry of Battenberg gave a grand ball at Kensington Palace to-night to celebrate the début of her daughter, Princess Ena. The 700 guests included King Edward, the Prince of Wales, and many other royal personages and the Diplomatic Corps. Mr. Choate, the American Ambassador, with Mrs. and Miss Choate, was present.

Dinner to Count Cassini.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 25.—The Russian Ambassador, Count Cassini, who is soon to leave America, was the guest of honor this evening at a dinner given by the French Ambassador and Mme. Jusserand. Among those present were Baroness des Planches, wife of the Italian Ambassador; the German Ambassador and Baroness von Sternberg, the Belgian Minister and Baroness Moncheur, the Netherlands Minister and Mme. van Swinderen, the Baroness Giskra, and Mr. O'Bierne, the Chargé d'Affaires of Great Britain.

SHE DEMANDS THAT DOG.

Which Departed After Her Husband, Whom She Relinquishes.

Mrs. Frederick Stein, who lives at the Hotel Marie Antoinette, appeared in the Harlem Court yesterday against Mrs. Elsie Burke, her sister-in-law, of 236 East Eighty-eighth Street, in a dispute over the ownership of a King Charles spaniel.

Mrs. Stein laid upon the desk a dog collar with the name "Flora" engraved on its silver mounting. Magistrate Baker raised his eyebrows, patiently.

"Some time ago," said Mrs. Stein, with a firm, sweet smile, "my husband left me. Later he returned and took away my spaniel, Flora, and gave her to Mrs. Burke here, who is his sister."

"Yes," murmured Magistrate Baker.

"Well," said Mrs. Stein, somewhat sharply and seemingly surprised that the Magistrate did not catch her meaning, "I don't want my husband back, but I want that dog!"

Magistrate Baker involuntarily started. "I'll adjourn this case until Monday," he said.

CORTELYOU TO POSTMASTERS

Tells Them Not to Go Over Departmental Heads with Troubles.

WASHINGTON, May 25.—The National Association of Postmasters of the Second and Third Class, which met here to-day, was addressed by Postmaster General Cortelyou, who outlined his position regarding organizations of postal employes and the part they may take in politics. He said, in part:

"Organizations within the department to receive its sanction must have for their object improvements in the service or be of a purely fraternal or beneficial character. With any other purpose in view, they are detrimental to the service. It must be clearly understood that the officials of the department and not the members of any organization are the proper persons to present the department's needs to Congress."

As to the efficiency of the Postal Service, Mr. Cortelyou said:

"We have altogether too much red tape in the department. I think we go around too many corners instead of making stright cuts to results."

DENIALS BY DRESSER.

Takes Stand in Shipbuilding-Trust Company Suit—Case Ended.

Daniel Le Roy Dresser was a witness yesterday in the suit brought by the Commonwealth Trust Company, successor of the Trust Company of the Republic, against Dresser, Nixon, Young, and others who were interested in the promotion of the United States Shipbuilding Company, to determine the ownership of securities now in the company's possession and to have declared void certificates of bonds and stock issued by the Shipbuilding underwriters.

Mr. Dresser denied that he had told Baron Pierre Calvert Rogniat that the shipbuilding enterprise was in perfect condition, and that he had ever given certain authority to John W. Young which it was asserted he had given to Young. The case ended with the testimony of J. D. Livingston. Justice Amend reserved decision.

CONDEMNS TRUST METHODS.

Congregational Slap at Rockefeller Discouraged by Gladden.

OBERLIN, Ohio, May 25.—At the closing session of the annual meeting of the Congregational Association of Ohio here to-day resolutions were adopted condemning "all such methods of business men and business corporations as are working injustice, embittering classes and destroying that confidence which is the foundation of all abiding prosperity." Specifically the resolutions condemn, as thoroughly anti-Christian, the theory and practices which accompany it, that business is a warfare to be waged for personal or corporate gain, and whose end is monopolistic control.

A clause in the resolutions as originally presented by the committee specifically condemning John D. Rockefeller, was, upon motion of Dr. Washington Gladden, voted down.

PLAY HAUNTED ACTRESS.

Miss Curtis Declaimed "Ben Hur" While Delirious in a Hotel.

Patrons of the Park View Hotel, at 55 West Forty-second Street—at least those on the third floor—have heard parts of Lew Wallace's "Ben Hur" with a pathetic setting the past week. May Curtis, who, it was said at the hotel last night, returned this month from a road tour with the play, was removed late yesterday afternoon to Flower Hospital suffering with what Dr. McDuffie, the ambulance surgeon, called "mania."

The young woman, who is twenty-nine years old, registered as Miss P. Maulnacht. She went to the hotel May 14. Worn by overstudy she became ill and delirious. She declaimed passages from the play in which she had been appearing, and yesterday became so violent that she was removed from the hotel in a straitjacket. Dr. E. Arnold, who has been attending Miss Curtis, said he thought she would soon recover.

WHY NOT A MUNICIPAL BAND?

The Boys' Concert Brings a Suggestion from Bandmaster Fanciulli.

Francesco Fanciulli, the bandmaster, has written to THE TIMES suggesting that, in view of the success of the concert of the juvenile bands at the Twelfth Regiment Armory on Wednesday, it would be a good plan to establish a free conservatory for these ambitious beginners. As an outgrowth of this, he says, the city ought to start a municipal band, such as European cities have, to officiate on all occasions in which the city takes part. It would be well, he adds, to have this band give free concerts all the year.

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

The chief social event of to-day in town will be the marriage at 4:30 o'clock this afternoon in Trinity Chapel of Miss Eleanor A. Scott, daughter of Judge Francis M. Scott and Mrs. Scott, to William Henry Tew, formerly of Jamestown, N. Y., but now of Glasgow, Scotland. The ceremony will be followed by a reception at the residence of the bride's parents, at 42 Park Avenue. Miss Margaret Simes Scott will be her sister's maid of honor, and the bridesmaids will be the Misses Elizabeth and Dorothy Hurry, Betty Collamore, Miriam Gross, Julia Dawson, and Marie L. Wickes. James Dinsworth Tew will be his brother's best man, and the ushers will be T. Sutherland Scott, a brother of the bride; John D. Kilpatrick and Clifford Buckingham of New York, Charles E. Carpenter of Berlin, Alfred J. Brandt of Arnheim, Holland; Frank L. Warren, Jr., of Stockbridge, Mass.; Charles E. Egbert of Niagara, Ontario, and Ralph Whiting of Boston. The Rev. Frederick George Scott of St. Matthew's Church, Quebec, a cousin of the bride, will perform the ceremony.

The engagement has been announced of W. Templeton Johnson, son of Mrs. Oliver Templeton Johnson of West New Brighton, S. I., and Miss Clara Sturges, youngest daughter of the late George Sturges of Chicago. Miss Sturges is a cousin of Miss Alberta Sturges and Hollister Sturges of this city, the latter being the children by her first husband of Mrs. Francis Leggett.

As previously announced, the wedding of Miss Mary Constance Berry, daughter of Oliver F. Berry, to Mortimer Percy Arnold will be quietly celebrated at the home of the bride's grandmother, Mrs. Thomas Andrews, on June 10. Miss Berry's maid of honor will be her cousin, Miss Florence Virginia Andrews, and her bridesmaids are to be Miss Sophie Louise Sherwood and Miss Mary Augusta Besson. Mr. Arnold's best man will be Henri Anthony Louis Hoguet, and his ushers Charles Lansing Tuttle, Ralph Baldwin Duane Taylor. The Rev. Donald Sage Mackay, pastor of the Fifth Avenue Collegiate Church, will perform the ceremony.

Mr. and Mrs. William Bayard Blackwell, (Miss Bogert,) who spent the Winter at Morristown, are occupying an apartment at the Renaissance, Fifth Avenue and Forty-third street. Later they will go to Lair Manor for the Summer. Mr. Blackwell has purchased a large farm near Morristown, and as both he and his wife are devoted to country life, they will probably make it their permanent home.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Seligman opened Shorelands yesterday, their Elberon cottage. They purpose sailing the latter part of July for Europe, taking their daughter, Miss Rhoda Seligman, with them. They will be absent about two months.

Mrs. John King Van Rensselaer of Philadelphia will be the guest for several weeks in June of Mrs. Frank Sturgis, who has opened her Lenox home.

The wedding of F. Kingsbury Curtis of this city and Miss Cornelia Day McLanahan will take place in Venice in June. Mr. Curtis was graduated from Yale in 1894, and his first wife, who was a Miss Hare, died some three years ago. He is a brother of Dr. Rotherose Curtis.

ZIEGLER'S ADOPTED SON GETS NEARLY $10,000,000

Fourteen-Year-Old Heir Was Son of Capitalist's Half-Brother.

CONNECTICUT MAY CLAIM TAX

Question as to the Domicile of the Testator—Simple Services at Funeral To-morrow.

Special to The New York Times.

STAMFORD, Conn., May 25.—Services at the funeral of William Ziegler which is to be held at noon on Saturday at his Great Island residence, in Noroton, are to be very simple. There will be no eulogy. Many of the relatives live in Iowa, and have not yet arrived.

Justice W. J. Gaynor, counsel of the decedent, was at the house all day. William Ziegler, Jr., the fourteen-year-old adopted son, was out of doors to-day for the first time since his injury six weeks ago. The boy will not be able to attend the entombment service.

It was learned to-day that this adopted boy is the son of George Washington Brand, of Davenport, Iowa, a half-brother of Mr. Ziegler. He was adopted formally by Mr. and Mrs. Ziegler in 1898. A sister, Florence, lives with her father. The mother is living in Europe.

Mr. Ziegler last December, when he realized that his condition was hopeless, caused a codicil, drawn by Justice Gaynor, to be added to his will. As understood, it gives to the adopted son the bulk of his fortune. Ample provision is made for the widow, but the Ziegler relatives, it is said, do not get large bequests.

The lad, who probably will enter into a large part of an estate estimated at more than $10,000,000, is democratic in his ways and a great favorite with all the employes about the estate. He has been for years a close associate of Mr. Ziegler and has learned a good deal about business. He is fond of horses and outdoor sports.

It was stated to-night that Mr. Ziegler several years ago set aside a large sum the income of which is to be used to prosecute the search for the north pole. There is a clause in his will, it is said, which covers this matter.

Mr. Ziegler's will probably will be filed in New York next week. He was not, it is understood, a legal resident of Connecticut. Attorney General King of Connecticut is making an investigation, however, to ascertain just what was Mr. Ziegler's status. If it be shown that he did have a domicile here his estate will be subject to a heavy succession tax.

THEY UPHOLD ROCKEFELLER.

Baptist Clergymen in Boston Won't Join Dr. Johnson's Crusade.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, May 25.—The Rev. Dr. Henson, pastor of Tremont Temple, the largest Baptist Church in New England, has no sympathy with the movement of the Rev. Dr. H. S. Johnson of the Warren Avenue Baptist Church to organize a crusade against the acceptance of Rockefeller money by the Baptists.

Dr. Henson said:. "There is no call for setting up the cry of 'tainted' money against Mr. Rockefeller's gifts. To refuse Mr. Rockefeller's donations, Brother Johnson should try some standard by which 'tainted' money may be sifted from that which is not, and perhaps in that case all money might appear 'tainted.' I certainly am not in favor of any movement against accepting gifts from Mr. Rockefeller, and I doubt that the movement moves. At least I shall not move with it."

The Rev. Mr. Wellington, one of the associate pastors at the Ruggles Street Church, said frankly: "Mr. Johnson will not have my support in any movement against the acceptance of any of Mr. Rockefeller's gifts."

The Rev. Dr. Dixon of the Ruggles Street Church defended Mr. Rockefeller, saying: "I have taken particular pains to investigate the charges against Mr. Rockefeller and I find them false. His is not 'tainted' money."

ANOTHER OHIO BANK CLOSED.

Loans to Davis of Canton Involve Mineral City Institution.

CANTON, Ohio, May 25.—The People's Deposit Bank of Mineral City, Ohio, closed its doors to-day. The President of the institution says loans of about $50,000 have been made by the bank to W. L. Davis of Canton, whose heavy loans, it was said, caused the suspension of the Canton State Bank yesterday.

There was but little flurry among depositors of Canton banks to-day as a result of the failure of the Canton State Bank. There has been no run, and depositors got cash on demand.

Although warrants for two arrests had been prepared, they may not be served. A meeting of all the bankers of the city was held to-day to make a satisfactory adjustment of affairs of the closed bank.

Special to The New York Times.

ORANGE, N. J., May 25.—The line of the new Rahway Valley Railroad was formally opened yesterday afternoon, when a party headed by Louis Keller, Secretary of the company, rode from New Orange to Springfield in a special car. It is thought that the line through to Summit will be completed soon and the entire road placed in operation this Summer. Connection is made at New Orange with the New Jersey Central Railroad. A direct route to the Baltusrol Golf Club will be afforded. Work on the railroad started last Fall.

STAGE HORSE THROWS RIDER.

Hurricane, Who Wins "The Suburban" Nightly, in a Bad Humor.

Hurricane, the horse which wins "The Suburban" every night in the play of that name, now being given at Proctor's Theatre in East One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street, threw and badly injured his jockey, George Dillon, nineteen years old, of 1,867 Park Avenue, while the boy was exercising him outside the theatre last night. Dillon was flung upon a heap of timber. He was picked up unconscious, and was found to have a badly lacerated scalp wound and probable internal injuries. Dr. Burns took him to Harlem Hospital.

Hurricane had done his part in the first act of the show and, with four other horses, was being exercised around the block. He was not in good humor, possibly because one of the "super" horses had almost beaten him in the race on the stage.

On the second canter around the block as Hurricane passed the rear entrance of the theatre he shied and threw his rider.

MISS RITCHIE IN A SMASH.

Opera Singer's Victoria Run Down—Lauds the Determined Driver.

Miss Adèle Ritchie, the comic opera prima donna, who, since her entry into vaudeville, has been termed "a little piece of Dresden china," came near to being a broken piece when her victoria was run down and smashed in front of the Hotel St. Regis yesterday afternoon.

Miss Ritchie had dropped into the St. Regis on her way home from the matinée at Proctor's Twenty-third Street house. She was just leaving the hotel for her stable in Fifty-eighth Street, when a cab, driven by John A. Miller, of 1,297 Third Avenue, disputed the right of way with Miss Ritchie's cab driver. Both were determined men, and there was a crash.

The poles of the hansom went through the plate-glass window of the victoria, showering Miss Ritchie with the fragments. She, however, escaped unhurt. Policeman Tobin of the East Fifty-first Street Station wanted to arrest the hansom driver, but Miss Ritchie would not have it.

"He had the courage of his convictions," she said. "It seemed good for him to sass and drive into us. I like a man who doesn't crawl."

HIPPODROME GIRL GONE.

And She's Wanted in London, Too—Sleuths Seeking Her.

The management of the Hippodrome was concerned yesterday over the disappearance of one of its performers. On Tuesday night Martha Clews, a member of the Teims troupe of trapeze acrobats, went out for a minute and did not come back. She has not been seen since.

Yesterday a letter signed by the girl came to Mr. Teims, stating that she did not intend to come back, and she did not tell why. She had an engagement at the London Hippodrome, and intended to sail on the Philadelphia to-morrow.

Detectives are looking for her.

Large Crowd on Campus During Tapping Ceremony.

CAPT. SHEVLIN PASSED OVER

Football Player Departed in His Auto When Only Two Vacancies Remained.

NEW HAVEN, May 25.—The Yale Senior Society elections were held this afternoon, according to the historic "tap-day" custom, and there was a large crowd on the campus during the slapping of the forty-five men taken into the three societies. As a result of the election, the names of at least two well-known men of the university were omitted from the list of forty-five.

Thomas L. Shevlin of Minneapolis, Minn., Captain of the football team and one of the greatest all-around athletes that ever attended Yale, was not tapped. After the Skull and Bones and Scroll and Key lists had been filled and there remained two nominations for Wolf's Head, Shevlin left the campus and whirled away in his automobile. Storrs Wells, to Harry Tyford Peters, son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel T. Peters. The church was decorated with masses of white flowers and green. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. Ernest M. The bride, who wore a trained robe of white satin and a point lace veil caught with orange blossoms, walked up the nave with her father. She was attended by Miss Marian Fish, maid of honor, and by the Misses Louisine Peters, Janet Fish, Anna Raynor Bush, and Maria Moran as bridesmaids. The wedding yesterday in Grace Church of Edward Sturges Hosmer, formerly of Washington, and Miss Estelle de Peyster, a daughter of the late Col. Johnston de Peyster of Tivoli-on-Hudson, was a quiet affair, owing to a death in the bride's family. The bride walked to the altar with her brother-in-law, Garret B. Kip, who gave her away. WALTZ STEP BY AUTO.

Terpsichorean Fireworks in Times Square—Pilot Under Bond Now.

Fred C. Holland of 435 West Twenty-third Street was driving south with a friend in an automobile through Times Square yesterday afternoon when the machine, which had been moving with a soft, gliding motion, its gentle respiration breathing of Summer indolence and benzine, suddenly went crazy at Forty-third Street.

For the next ten minutes it behaved like a scared crab, darting sideways, forward, backward, the front and back of the machine trying to go in different directions with results deleterious to the tires.

"Hi, stop that bubble!" cried Roundsman Polly of the traffic squad.

From the vortex of a sudden swirl of vapor Holland gasped:

"C-cant. The thing's gone daffy."

As if to corroborate his words the automobile executed an Oriental salaam which raised its hind wheels two feet in the air and darted up the east side of the square. Policeman Polly threw aside his helmet and sprinted after it. At Forty-third Street Roundsman Dennin joined in the chase, while a crowd looked on and smiled.

The auto, on its northward career as far as Forty-sixth Street, picked up three more policeman, who could do little, however, owing to the eccentric actions of the machine, which, just as a collision seemed certain, dodged with the movement and grace of an experienced waltzmaster.

At last, after a series of queer antics, the refractory automobile took to one of the isles of safety. There it stopped and waited for the policemen. It submitted quietly.

"What do you mean?" demanded Polly of Holland.

"I didn't do it!" protested Holland. "If it wasn't a machine I'd swear it had been drinking."

The police, however, exonerated the machine and held its driver, Holland, for disorderly conduct. In the West Side Court Magistrate Wahle held Holland in $500 bonds to keep the peace for six months.

Cincinnatians Outplay Champions and Win by Score of 5 to 1.

Pitcher Ewing, using the wet ball with terrific speed, was the obstacle in the way of the New Yorks winning yesterday, for the best the champions could do with his delivery was three safe hits, and the final score was 5 to 1 in favor of the Cincinnatians. In addition to their victory, the visitors gained the distinction of being the only team of the National League—and the champions have met all of them—that captured a majority of the games of the series from the local team. In addition to Ewing's splendid pitching, the fielding of the visitors was almost faultless, the only error charged against them being in the eighth inning, when Sebring allowed Mertes's hard drive to drop out of his hands, which finally resulted in the only run of the game for the New Yorks.

Only one Cincinnatian got so far as second base up to the fourth inning, but in that inning the visitors batted McGinnity hard, but if all the chances had been properly accepted one run only would have been the result. Seymour opened with a long hit to centre field, which was finely caught by Donlin. Sebring placed a safe one back of second base, but Browne accepted Barry's fly, and the "rooters" breathed easier. Steinfeldt, however, hit strongly to left field for two bases, scoring Sebring. Kelley reached first on four bad balls, and a pass and a wild throw by Bresnahan to third enabled Steinfeldt to cross the plate. Umpire Bausewine declared the ball was not in play, and sent Steinfeldt back to third and Kelley to first. Phelps scored both men on his high hit to left field, which Mertes failed to stop, and Phelps landed on third.

McGinnity pitched for three more innings, and in the eighth he was relieved by Taylor. Bridwell opened on the newcomer with a safe hit, but after reaching second on a passed ball, was left there. In the ninth, however, Barry got first on called balls, reached second on Steinfeldt's hit to Taylor, the latter slipping down. He threw the ball wildly to McGann, and Barry made a dash for the plate. Gilbert, who recovered the ball, also threw badly to Bresnahan, and Barry was safe and Steinfeldt reached third. On Phelps's long fly out Steinfeldt scored. Mertes's escape from being put out by Sebring's failure to hold his fly, a base on balls to Dahlen, Gilbert's out from Ewing to Barry, and Strang's lucky hit to Ewing, which he was unable to gather, gave the New Yorks their run in the eighth inning.

ST. LOUIS, 3; BROOKLYN, 0.

The Brooklyns played one of the most listless games of the season in their last effort with St. Louis at Washington Park yesterday, and as a result were shut out, the score being 3 to 0. "Jack" Taylor's delivery was practically unsolvable, Hanlon's men getting but three base hits. Not a local runner reached third base, and only one got to second. Doescher was in the pitcher's box throughout the nine innings for the first time this year, and while he was fairly effective he was poorly supported. The score:

AMERICAN LEAGUE.

Powell Batted All Over Field at Cleveland and Griffith's Men Lost.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, May 25.—It was "Eagles' Day" at League Park, and, as usual, it rained, keeping what would have been a large crowd down. Last year on "Eagles' Day" the New Yorks and Clevelands clashed. "Jack" Powell was invincible then and New York won. To-day Powell proved an easy proposition, and Cleveland made runs at will, touching the ex-boilermaker up for fourteen hits, while a base on balls, a hit by pitcher, and two errors also figured in the rungetting for Lajoie's men.

On the other hand, Joss was a puzzle, no one reaching second base until the ninth inning. Then Dougherty made a single and went to third on Keeler's hot liner through the pitcher's box. Joss had a chance to shut the visitors out even then, but must have taken pity on his brother Eagles, for with one out he let Dougherty score, retiring Williams at first when he could have caught Dougherty at the plate. Anderson was easy, thus ending a very short game that was played with showers and music for variations.

The playing of the New Yorks was very disappointing to the Cleveland rooters, who last year recognized them as a possible pennant winner in 1905.

Some 500 Eagles from Northern Ohio with a band furnished enthusiasm, the band honoring each player as he came to the bat with an appropriate selection. When "Willie" Keeler was greeted with "On the Bowery," the little star player received a great ovation.

"Smiling Al" Orth will be Griffith's selection for pitcher to-morrow, and Hess probably for Cleveland. The score:

DETROIT, Mich., May 25.—The Philadelphias won a see-saw game from Detroit to-day on two hits, an error, and Hoffman's steal of home in the ninth inning. Donovan's delivery was wild at first, and then easily solved. Mullin pitched well. Waddell was taken out in the ninth inning and Bender filled the bases, but prevented scoring. Jersey City Scores Lucky Victory Over Rochester in Eighth Inning.

Special to The New York Times.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 25.—Rochester outbatted and outfielded Jersey City to-day and had the game in its hands up to the eighth inning, then gave the game away by a series of stupid errors. With the score 3 to 0 in the eighth, Jersey City went to bat and made five runs on two hits and a bunch of errors. Umpire Conway put Manager Murray of the visiting team off the grounds for talking from the bench, calling a policeman to enforce his order. McCann and Pfanmiller, who were not playing, were also sent off the grounds. The score:

TORONTO, 4; NEWARK, 3.

Special to The New York Times.

TORONTO, Ontario, May 25.—The "battery" work of Currie and Sullivan was the star feature of the Newark-Toronto game this afternoon, resulting in a victory for the home team by a score of 4 to 3. O'Brien's wild throw to first base sent the ball among the "bleachers" and two Newark men ran home. White's fielding and Sullivan's fine catch of a foul fly were also features. Hesterfer was unsteady. The score:

Mr. Smith went into bankruptcy on May 6, 1904, with liabilities of $48,316 and assets unknown, and was recently discharged.

The sales yesterday included some real estate at Hastings, N. Y., which brought $1,965; interests in the estate of Richard Augustine Smith, amounting to $500,000, sold for $3,100; interests in the John Campbell estate, sold for $2,500, and 3,150 shares of stock of the Chelsea Paper Company for $7, making a total realized from the sale of $7,572.

ROBERT G. WOODWARD.—Peter B. Olney, referee in bankruptcy, of 68 William Street, has reported against a discharge from bankruptcy to Robert G. Woodward, who formerly conducted the Hotel Woodward at Broadway and Fifty-fifth Street, and whose discharge was opposed by Leiser Brothers on behalf of H. M. Rose & Co. A petition in bankruptcy was filed against Mr. Woodward on April 6, 1904, and his schedules showed liabilities $41,232 and nominal assets $15,225. Lesser Brothers opposed the discharge on the ground that on March 18, 1904, Mr. Woodward transferred to Edward H. Titus the entire assets in the hotel, accounts and moneys collected from his trustee in bankruptcy furniture and household and office fixtures. An inventory of the property transferred to Mr. Titus made at the time showed an estimated value of $10,000. The bankrupt had already, in November, 1903, made an assignment of the lease of the hotel premises to Mr. Titus as trustee. A consideration of the transfer was that Mr. Titus agreed to pay certain creditors whose claims aggregated $23,000 forty per cent. of the amount of their claims, but other creditors whose claims aggregated $17,000 were ignored in the transaction. At the time of the transfer Mr. Titus gave or advanced to Mr. Woodward $2,500, of which Mr. Woodward paid $2,000 to his wife as part payment of a debt of $6,000 for borrowed money. Referee Olney finds that by this transfer to Mr. Titus, Mr. Woodward substantially divested himself of all of his property. As to the household fixtures and furniture of his private apartment in the hotel Mr. Woodward testified that they belonged to his wife, but the referee finds that except a piano, they never were paid for, and there is no evidence that there was any valid transfer to his wife.

Judgment Against Congressman Towne

Another judgment was entered yesterday against Congressman Charles A. Towne in favor of John B. Tillotson for $10,816. The amount is said to be due on two notes of $5,000 each made by Mr. Towne on Feb. 26, 1904, payable six months and a year from date.

SAVOY HOTEL
LONDON.

OVERLOOKING THE RIVER AND EMBANKMENT GARDENS.

Never has the Press of England shown greater unanimity than in its praise of the additions and improvements to the Savoy Hotel, London, upon which have been spent upwards of one million pounds sterling.

The new building is characterized by extreme luxuriousness. The Times.

All is peace and refinement.—Pall Mall Gazette.

One of the most luxurious and one of the most comfortable hotels in the world.—Referee.

More beautiful than ever.—Morning Leader.

A delight to the eye—no lavishness seems to have been grudged. Sportsman.

One of the handsomest of London edifices.—Globe.

Elegance and artistic character are everywhere. Nothing has been omitted that could conduce to the comfort and content of the visitor. Ladies' Field.

The most beautiful hotel in Europe.—Outlook.

An ideal home for twentieth century London.—Queen.

The great pile of buildings included in this latest addition to the architectural sights of London forms a combination of luxury and beauty which cannot be surpassed in the wide world. The New Savoy is a vast palace of a thousand splendours, of a thousand surprising and delightful innovations Nothing that could contribute to the comfort, the smoothness, and the joy of life is wanting which the inventive genius of America and Europe could supply, or that the taste and skill of the world's schools of art in all its branches could furnish. The place is, in its way, a very triumph of genius. Its match is not to be found in London, nor in Paris, nor, indeed, in any capital of this little planet. To do it justice in a necessarily brief article is impossible. Having rambled through its glorious salons and galleries, and ante-chambers, up and down marble staircases of noble breadth, beneath panelled ceilings, adorned in relief with exquisite golden tracery, one feels that all this royal magnificence, this opulent beauty, might well inspire a volume which should be bound in white satin and gold.—Western Mail.

Decorated Glass Dutiable at 60 Per Cent.—Other Decisions.

In a decision written by General Appraiser Sharretts, the Board of United States General Appraisers yesterday overruled protests filed by F. W. Woolworth and A. D. Matthews & Sons of New York relative to the rate of duty applicable to tumblers, goblets, and other articles, which have been cut or otherwise decorated. Collector Stranahan classified the goods under the provision in the Dingley tariff for ornamental glassware, with duty at the rate of 60 per cent. ad valorem. The importers set up the claim that the articles are glass blanks, and as such dutiable at only 45 per cent. ad valorem.

Other importers' claims overruled yesterday were by Denny Brothers, Reiss & Brady, Benziger Brothers, Locke & Allhorr, J. & H. Rosenberg, B. Altman & Co., Meihami & Son, Cusenier Company, C. H. Pinches, I. Emerich & Co., New York.

Protests sustained were by Albert Lorsch & Co., Adolph Fricke, L. D. Bloch & Co., Wilmerding & Bisset, Abraham Unger, Steuer Brothers & Co., Gerard, Lueders & Co., Merck & Co., Robert McBratney, the C. Wilderman & Co., New York.

The board dismissed a claim filed by John D. Gluck & Son, while a protest by Thomas Prosser & Son, New York, was partially sustained.

THE OUTSIDE SECURITIES

Course of Prices Turns Downward Again.

Northern Securities Shows Sharpest Decline—Rumors Affecting American Can Preferred.

The movements of outside stocks back and forth for the past few days have offered excellent opportunities to traders to make profitable turns first on one side and then on the other side of the market, but they must have been somewhat disconcerting to those who would buy stocks for more than a day. Yesterday most of the active stocks declined and closed at about the lowest, the losses in some issues amounting to several points. Northern Securities, which had led the previous day's advance, yesterday led the decline. Among the other active issues which ended the day at the lowest were United Copper and American Can preferred. The Greene stocks reversed their position of the previous day along with the rest of the market, and one of the group, Greene Consolidated Gold, lost more than it had gained on Wednesday.

AMERICAN CAN preferred sold down two points from the opening sale and showed at the close a net loss of 1½ points. Rumors were current yesterday that despite the expectations recently expressed in some quarters that the next dividend on the stock would be at an increased rate there would in fact be no increase at the next dividend period. The explanation was offered that the management was desirous of accumulating a still larger surplus before distributing a larger share of the company's earnings, and that for the time being the dividend would be allowed to stand at the 5 per cent. rate.

AMERICAN WRITING PAPER.—In addition to the sale of American Writing Paper preferred stock, reported as having taken place on Wednesday, there was a sale of 100 shares at 26¾ made soon after the opening.

The principal transactions in the outside market yesterday, with high, low, and last prices, were as follows:

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Irregular; Call Money Easy, 2@2½ Per Cent.

The Market Loses About Half of Wednesday's Improvement Upon Unwarranted Doubts Regarding Harmony.

The Stock Exchange did not yesterday enter into undisputed possession of its promised land. There was some early improvement based upon belated buying upon the news regarding the adjustment of relations between the Hill and Harriman forces, of which London's prices gave proof that its intelligence was better and earlier than our own. But as the day proceeded enthusiasm waned for reasons of a mixed sort. There was a failure of an unimportant sort announced from Cincinnati, and another from Boston, about which details were lacking during business, and which was said to be "the wrong one, anyhow." Rumors regarding a Japanese naval defeat disheartened the foreign markets, and the domestic produce Exchanges had word of a frost in the crop regions. It cannot have been very bad, for corn lost almost all of its extravagant advance of the day before, and cotton also was weak, encouragingly weak it might be said, if there could be any confidence felt that it is not under manipulation rivaling the corn corner. There were also reports of the dissolution of the steel rail pool, which both—so it was said—had never existed and had failed in the purposes for which it was organized, to wit, the maintenance of prices.

These pinpricks might have been resisted had it not been for doubts regarding the good faith of the reports that the warring factions had reached an adjustment of relations between the railways serving the Northwest. Certainly the wavering of prices did color doubts lest the reports were unauthentic. Possibly to-day also other influences may mask the effect of this stimulating intelligence, but they can no longer inspire doubts of its truth. The Executive Committees of both the Northern Pacific and Union Pacific Railways yesterday gave formal sanction to the informal agreement, and instructed their officers to execute its details, which even now may be incomplete. Nevertheless of its substance there can be no doubt. It is a joint undertaking, based upon good business considerations, and resembles the Northern Securities arrangement in that it is neither a victory nor defeat, but a mutual undertaking for mutual advantage. It is to be remarked that it is broader than even the Northern Securities compromise, since it includes Union Pacific, and, although as yet of comparatively modest dimensions, it includes not improbably the germ of the settlement of similar disputes in a similar manner. Nothing could be simpler than the substitution of a jointly constructed road for parallel and competing roads. Wherever feasible it obviates excessive construction and competition, with the waste and bankruptcy which characterized earlier eras. Quite probably the last word has not yet been said, but at least the Street was in error in doubting the good faith with which the "magnates" attacked and, it is to be hoped, settled at least this phase of a serious topic.

FINAL JAPANESE PAYMENT.

The final payment upon the recent $75,000,000 issue of Japanese bonds fell due yesterday, and was paid to the bankers who received the subscriptions. Two payments of 5 per cent. each had been made on the bonds, leaving about 77 per cent. to be paid yesterday, or about $58,000,000. This large amount was transferred without any effect upon the money market, which was due to the fact that the subscriptions paid in were immediately made available in the market. Kuhn, Loeb & Co., who floated the Japanese bonds, yesterday received subscriptions to an issue of $23,500,000 of preferred B stock of the American Smelters Securities Company, but this was not a factor in the money market for the reason that the payment upon this issue will not be made until June 1. The feature of the money market yesterday, as for some time past, was the abundance of funds seeking employment at current rates. Short-time loans are being made at 3 per cent., and six months' money is available in large amounts at 3½ per cent. Foreign houses have made many loans at the latter rate against sales of bills of exchange, and it is thought that any advance in the six months' rate would largely increase the offerings of foreign funds. Foreign exchange yesterday showed ease followed by a recovery in rates which carried them to the level of the previous day, 4.8720 for demand sterling.

CAR AND FOUNDRY DIVIDEND.

Change Made in Date of Payments Upon Preferred Stock.

In order to make the payment of dividends correspond with the divisions of the fiscal year the Directors of the American Car and Foundry Company yesterday declared a dividend of 1 1-6 per cent. on the company's preferred stock, payable July 1, to stockholders of record June 8. This is at the regular rate of 7 per cent. per annum, but is for two months instead of for three months, as the dividends have been paid in the past. Heretofore the payments have been made quarterly, beginning in February, but the fiscal year ended not in February but in April. This was the cause of some confusion, and the present change in the dividend periods is made to avoid a conflict of dates. Hereafter the preferred stock dividend will be paid in quarterly instalments of 1¾ per cent each on the first days of October, January, April, and July.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, May 25.—The local money market to-day was not changed. The usual table of rates, &c., follow:

Call loans, 3@3½ per cent.; time loans, collateral, 3½@4¼ per cent.; time loans, mercantile paper, 3¾@4 per cent.; Clearing House loans, 2½ per cent. New York funds at par. Clearings, $22,986,175; balances, $1,461,445; Sub-Treasury debit, $13,776.

Dullness was the prevailing feature in the local market. A fairly good tone was to be seen at the opening, but commission houses appeared with selling orders and prices soon began to melt. Traders were inclined to fill up the bids, which gave the market a soft appearance. There was little change in the situation during the afternoon. The supply of stock continued to grow, while buyers were scarce. Closing prices were generally heavy. The complete list of transactions follows:

TRADING IN BALTIMORE.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, May 25.—A firmer tone in the local money market to-day was attributed to the call on funds here for recent settlements on building construction and for various bond payments, including the Washington Terminal and Japanese war loans. Several institutions have made their regular rate 4½ per cent., but there is still some cheaper money around.

The success of the Cotton Duck reorganization plan is practically assured. Enough of the stocks of the two companies and of the income bonds of the Mount Vernon Company have been deposited with the Continental Trust Company to enable the committee to carry the plan into effect without any difficulty, and it is expected that practically the entire issues of the various securities will be deposited before the plan closes at noon Monday.

A member of the reorganization committee to-day said that $500,000 of the income bonds were deposited yesterday by outside holders.

After the noon recess a strong specialty market developed in Seaboards and Cotton Duck incomes. Seaboard rights sold at ¾, an advance of ⅛, and gained ¼ more at the close on heavy trading. The new common advanced ⅛, to 24½, and the new second preferred was steady at 50.

Cotton Duck incomes sold in large blocks at 31. Northern Central stock opened steady at par and declined 1 point. Other issues were steady.

The closing was irregular and dull. The sales were: Shares, 800; bonds, $59,600, as follows:

CHICAGO QUOTATIONS.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 25.—At the outset in the local market to-day there was a tendency toward further improvement in prices, following the lead by New York. This strength subsided soon, and business grew dull and the tone easy. Can preferred sold down fractionally from 60. Biscuit common was strong momentarily, but fell to around yesterday's closing level. Swift's was taken in small lots at 107. Tool bonds went at 71, and West Chicago consolidated 5s at 80. Chicago Subway rose fractionally during the morning, thereby establishing a new high record. In the afternoon trading the feature was the selling of 225 shares of Biscuit common for Holsman & Co., "under the rules." One hundred shares went at 60, 75 shares brought 59¾, and 50 shares 59½. The next sale "regular" was at 60. The list follows:

ASK GOVERNOR TO SAVE POWERS OF ALDERMEN

Lawyers for Board and Citizens Denounce Franchise Shift.

PLAN TO HIT PENNSYLVANIA

Intimation That $3,000,000 Will Be Added to Demand for Connecting Road's New Grant.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, May 25.—Gov. Higgins to-day gave a hearing on the bills to deprive the Board of Aldermen of the City of New York of control over franchises. While Elihu Root and Edward M. Shepard, counsel for the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, were endeavoring to demonstrate to the Governor that the bills were purely in the public interest, and Lafiin Kellogg, counsel for the Board of Aldermen, was pronouncing the legislation "subversive of all principles of republican government and solely in the interest of a corporation which already controls the Government of two States, and seeks to control that of New York," highly interesting information as to the probable cost to the Pennsylvania Company of its attitude in the matter gained limited circulation in the Capitol corridors. A person whose relations with the city administration give weight to his statements was the authority.

As is well known, the agitation to take from the Aldermen the franchise power had its origin in the attitude of the board toward the franchises asked by the New York Connecting Railroad Company, owned and controlled by the Pennsylvania. The New York Connecting Railroad Company desired an extension of time for completion of its road, and also of the bridge which it is to construct over the East River. There was no important difference between the officers of the road and the Aldermen as to compensation to the city, but the Aldermen insisted that the road should be an electric instead of a steam road, and that the city should have absolute authority to say when there was a case of pubilc necesaity for closing of a street during construction of the road.

Mayor McClellan vetoed the bills taking the franchise-granting power from the Board of Aldermen, and in his veto message passed some severe criticism on the Pennsylvania Company for the methods which it had pursued.

The bills giving the Connecting Railroad Company the franchises it desires are now before the Mayor. According to the information given out here to-day, Mayor McClellan either will disapprove the bills or refuse to act on them. In that event, if Gov. Higgins signs the bills taking the franchise power from the Aldermen the Connecting Railroad Company will have to go to the Board of Estimate and Apportionment for an extension of its franchises.

Anticipating such a situation, it is said, the city authorities have had competent engineers investigate how much more it would cost the Connecting Railroad Company to build a spingle-span bridge across the East River than one with a pier on Ward's Island, as planned. The difference in cost, as reported by the consulting engineers, it is said, would be $3,000,000.

"When the Connecting Railroad Company's franchises come before the Board of Estimate and Apoprtionment," said the authority who disclosed the plan today, "there will be at least one of the board who will take the position that, since the company will save $3,000,000 by the privilege of having a pier on Ward's Island, it should be assessed that amount as a starter. The annual compensation also will be stiffened."

Besides Elihu Root and Edward M. Shepard, counsel for the Pennsylvania Company, the only person who appeared in favor of the bills at the hearing today was Lawrence Veiller, Secretary of the City Club. The bills were opposed by a committee of Aldermen consisting of R. S. Doull, representing the Democratic majority, and the following members of the Republican minority; Frank E. Sturgis, Elias Goodman, James Cowden Meyers, Robert Downing, Cornelius Shea, and John R. Davies. Julius Henry Cohen, representing the Citizens' Union, also opposed the bills.

Alderman Sturgis said the bills were unsound in principle. He called attention to the fact that the charter revisers had refused to take the franchise power away from the Aldermen, although the power undeniably had been abused. They believed, he said, that the punishment of officers recreant to duty could be left safely to the people.

Mr. Kellogg called attention to the fact that the deputies of the Controller and the Borough Presidents were empowered to represent them in the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, and it was therefore possible that franchises might be passed upon by a board, the only sitting member of which elected by the people would be the Mayor.

Edward M. Shepard said that the view of his client with respect to the advisability of taking the franchise granting power from the Aldermen and vesting it in the Board of Estimate was overwhelmingly indorsed by public sentiment in New York.

Mr. Root said that the bills might well be entitled measures to relieve the charter from all false pretenses.

"The Board of Aldermen is not the executive power of the City Government," he said. "There is no place in the government of a great city like New York for a large executive body if the government is to be conducted on business principles."

12 HURT IN CELLULOID FIRE.

Back Draught Blows Fireman Into the Street at a Broome Street Blaze.

Fire at a few minutes past 8 o'clock yesterday morning in the office and stockroom of August Trenkman's tortoise shell and celluloid goods manufactory, at 407 Broome Street, put thirty firemen in peril and did about $40,000 damage. One fireman was sent to a hospital, and eleven others after having hurts and burns attended to resumed duty.

The fire was said to be due to defective electrical wiring in the Trenkman store. It is said that of the articles manufactured 75 per cent. were in tortoise shell and the rest in celluloid, but that no stock of celluloid was kept in the office or the factory, at 241 Centre Street, what was needed being procured day by day.

The fire was discovered by a son of the proprietor, Henry Trenkman, and the engineer when they opened the store. P. A. Muller, a fireman of Engine Company No. 9, attached to the headquarters of Deputy Chief Kruger, at 173 Elm Street, sent in an alarm, and Battalion Chief T. J. Hayes and the men of Engine Companies Nos. 55, 31, and 20 found the store a furnace. There had been a slight back draught, when Hayes ordered a second alarm because the flames were seizing on the windows of a court in the rear of the Broome, Elm, and Centre Street houses. Another back draught, accompanied by a sheet of flame, followed, and about thirty of the firemen were thrown down or blown into the street. At that moment the second alarm apparatus arrived and the fire was soon out.

Fireman Otto P. Karsten of Engine Company No. 20 was so severely burned and cut by glass that he was taken to the Gouverneur Hospital. He will be on duty in a few days. Chief Hayes had his hair badly singed.

OHIO REPUBLICANS RENOMINATE HERRICK

Governor Says He Will Rid Capital of Lobbyists.

ROOSEVELT'S STAND INDORSED

Platform Upholds the President's Policy of Enforcing Anti-Trust Laws.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, May 25.—In a convention devoid of striking features and notable for its entire harmony the Republicans of Ohio to-day renominated Gov. Myron T. Herrick by acclamation and named a full State ticket. The platform indorses President Roosevelt's attitude against trusts, calls for the establishment of the merchant marine, and voices the usual party policy concerning the protective tariff.

Gov. Herrick in his speech of acceptance denounced professional lobbies, and declared that he would recommend such legislation as would rid the State capital of the presence and influence of lobbyists. The nominations besides Governor were:

Lieutenant Governor—ANDREW L. HARRIS.
Judge of the Supreme Court—WILLIAM C. DAVIS.
Attorney General—WADE M. ELLIS.
State Treasurer—W. S. McKINNON.

After reaffirming the State and National platforms of 1904 the platform says: "We stand by the principles of protection to American labor and American industries. We believe that Congress should so legislate that American ships with American sailors shall carry American products over all seas and through the Panama Canal. The American Navy should be made and kept equal to every need."

The President's policy toward monopolies is mentioned in these terms:

"President Roosevelt's comprehensive enforcement of the Republican laws against monopolies, combines, and trusts in restraint of trade has our hearty encouragement and support. We also indorse every effort for the active enforcement of existing laws to stop all unjust discriminations and special favors in the form of railway rebates or by any other device, and we favor such further legislation on that subject, with adequate penalties, as may, after full investigation, seem wise and conservative, yet adequate, to prevent unfair advantage to any, and to promote and insure the rights of all individuals, interests, and localities."

In accepting the renomination, Gov. Herrick said, in part:

"In Ohio to-day, and in all the States, there is a growing evil which gravely threatens to destroy the freedom of action [illegible] in the most important concern of the representatives of the people in the legislative department of the Government. I refer to the professional lobby. [illegible] that the purpose of the lobbyists may be, nor whether their object be good or bad, it is subversive of the basic principles upon which American institutions are founded to permit a few men to control legislation and to put their judgment as to what is best for the people against that of the representatives of the people, elected for the sole purpose of registering their will. The professional lobby should go.

"I purpose to recommend to the next General Assembly such action as will forever clear the chambers of the Senate and House, and the Capitol itself, of this baneful influence."

REGULARS GIVE A SHOW.

Annual Affair on Governors Island for Army Relief Work.

A terrific cannonading and the barking of Krag Jorgensens on Governor's Island yesterday afternoon puzzled a lot of folks who heard them as far away as Battery Park and South Street. A little later they learned that the noise was made by the soldiers of the Eighth Infantry, for the entertainment of a party of well-known New Yorkers, and not a salute to a foreign warship steaming up the bay.

Every year the soldiers on Governors Island give an entertainment under the auspices of the New York branch of the Army Relief Society, an organization formed for the purpose of aiding the widows and orphans of officers and enlisted men. Yesterday's affair was pronounced the most successful yet held, and a good sum was realized for the charity.

Prior to the sham battle, the picked company from the Eighth, that recently appeared at the military tournament in Madison Square Garden, gave a special drill. Next came a music drill by the full garrison that brought enthusiastic applause. Then there was some wall scaling, and the men proved that when it comes to climbing and jumping they are among the best in the army. The extended order drill followed, after a concert by the band of the Eighth Infantry the show ended. Later there was dancing in the officers' clubhouse.

Among those present were Rear Admiral and Mrs. Taylor, Miss Helen Gould, Mrs. Belmont, Mrs. Douglas Robinson, sister of the President; Gen. and Mrs. Charles F. Roe, Gen. and Mrs. Wade, Gen. Fred D. Grant and Mrs. Grant, Col. Halstead, Gen. and Mrs. Mills, Superintendent of West Point, and Mrs. Mills, Mrs. John M. Schofield, Mrs. St. Clair McKelway, Mrs. Edward M. Janeway, and Mrs. Henry Bischoff.

Employment Bureau License Revoked.

The employment bureau license of Sam Rubin, 111 Norfolk Street, one of the largest agencies in the city, was revoked yesterday by Commissioner Keating, on complaint of Adolf Lorber, proprietor of a restaurant in Grand Street. Lorber alleged that Rubin influenced his waiters to leave his employ in the busy season and that he practically instituted strikes among them.

Would Make Police Stations Alike.

Commissioner McAdoo is considering the plan of establishing a standard type of police station houses. He says he believes that police stations should be characteristic and possess an individuality in architecture which would make them instantly recognizable. The one built in Long Island City about two years ago he considers suitable for general use.

SOUTH'S HOPE IN ROOSEVELT.

Southern Industrial Parliament Stirred by Tribute to the President.

WASHINGTON, May 25.—The Southern Industrial Parliament was thrown into disorder at its last session to-day over the question of the adoption of a number of resolutions prepared by a committee, and also one introduced by W. A. Irwin of Durham, N. C., commending President Roosevelt's zeal in pressing forward the construction of the Isthmian Canal, which promises "incalculable aid in the extension and upbuilding of our export trade for cotton manufactures and other products," and calling upon him to lend his aid through the Department of Commerce and Labor to relieving the present depressing conditions surrounding the cotton industry.

Delegates bitterly protested against a motion by Secretary Murphy to postpone action on all resolutions until the next meeting of the Parliament and charged that an effort was being made to gag the members and sidetrack important matters. The motion was voted down.

Addressing the parliament upon his resolution, Mr. Irwin said the South needed help at this time, and the parliament was here to call for help. The man of the hour to whom the delegates should look, he declared amid applause, was President Roosevelt. The President, he said, was the greatest man in the country to-day, and not only had the power, but the mind and the will, to help.

NO FUN KEEPING BOARDERS.

According to Receiver Who Did So to Insure Payment of a Loan.

Henry B. Brockhurst of Jersey City told Judge Erwin, in the First District Court yesterday, that he was tired of running a boarding house.

"I sympathize with you," said the Judge, "and I will take the establishment you have been conducting off your hands."

Four months ago Thomas Lynapp kept the boarding house in question at 283 Pacific Avenue. Charles L. Gerth loaned him the money to start it. The loan was not paid at the appointed time, and Gerth brought suit. Judgment was given in his favor, and Judge Erwin appointed Mr. Brockhurst receiver with instructions to continue the boarding house, with the aid of Mr. and Mrs. Lynapp, and apply the profits to the payment of the judgment.

"Then my troubles began," said Mr. Brockhurst. "I found five boarders in the house. I notified Mr. and Mrs. Lynapp not to receive any money, but I only succeeded in finding two of the boarders. The other three managed to keep out of my way. I suppose the others paid Mr. Lynapp. Things were looking pretty bad as far as the judgment and the receiver's fees were concerned, but we managed to keep the boarding house going until yesterday, when Mr. Lynapp paid the judgment and the subsequent costs. That let me out and I propose to stay out. No more boarding house receiverships for me."

A PRISONER IN 10 MINUTES.

Policeman Told Off to Stop Speeding Autos Has a Short Wait.

Because Seventh Avenue is wide, and because it has not been patrolled between Fourteenth and Forty-second Streets by bicycle policemen, automobilists have made it a speedway.

Residents of the avenue sent a petition to Commissioner McAdoo asking for protection for their children. So Bronx Policeman Pressley was transferred, and yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock he went on duty.

Pressley had a prisoner in ten minutes. The chauffeur gave the name of John Johnson, nineteen years old, of 258 West Thirty-eighth Street. The owner of the machine, William Lawn of 158 West Forty-ninth Street, gave bail for him.

Both Mr. Lawn and his three friends were driven back down Seventh Avenue.

FORCE RING MEN TO DESERT TO WEAVER

Constituents in Autos Hunt Panic-Stricken Councilmen.

PHILADELPHIA WILD WITH JOY

Anti-Gas Lease Mayor Besieged by Cheering Thousands—Says He Is Sure of Victory.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 26.—This was John Weaver's first day as real Mayor of Philadelphia. He went into office two years ago as the tool and puppet of the ring, as so many other Mayors had done before him.

For a long time he had been struggling to throw off the chains, and when he turned Smyth and Costello out of office the other day he had nearly accomplished it. Then came Judge Ralston and his so-called "Organization Court," with an order putting out the Mayor's reform appointees. Yesterday the Supreme Court nullified that order, and to-day, for the first time in his two years, John Weaver was his own master, responsible to no man but the voters who elected him.

The spectacle of a Mayor who was actually a Mayor was so novel to the people of Philadelphia that they could not tire of it. They hung around the City Hall in immense crowds, waiting to see him, and when he emerged from the portals of the building they surged about him and tried to get hold of him.

Weaver's demeanor was that of a man who had thrown a great load off his shoulders. He was smiling and happy.

Says Situation Is Bright.

"The situation has never looked so bright as it does to-day," he said to THE NEW YORK TIMES reporter. "Everything seems to be coming our way now. As a matter of fact, I am astonished at the depth and extent of this outpouring of public sentiment. I felt confident from the first that the people would be aroused as never before, when once this thing had been brought to a square issue, but the extent of it surpasses all my expectations.

"At the start this was an up-hill fight. Everything seemed against us, and the obstacles were enormous. It is still a hard fight, but the change has been tremendous from one day to the next.

"The opponents of the gas lease are getting new accessions from the Councils. That, however, does not surprise me. I had counted on a change of sentiment among Councilmen from the first. I did not know how many or what Councilmen would oppose the lease, but I had not a doubt at any time that the opposition in the Councils would grow.

"I am sure we will win, and I am sure of it for the reason that the people are so thoroughly aroused. I never saw anything like it. That is the real reason for confidence.

"You ask me about the demonstrations of regard for me. All I can say is that they have surprised and touched me greatly. I have been touched, too, by the telegrams approving my course that have come in from all parts of the country. There is no distinction of party—Democrats and Republicans send them alike. The rush of letters and telegrams to-day was immense, but I have actually not had time to look at them, much less to have them assorted."

The Removal of Officials.

The Mayor was not communicative when asked about the details of the fight. He explained that he could not properly say anything about matters which it was his duty to communicate to Councils. He was asked about his reasons for removing Smyth and Costello, and answered that he could not give those reasons until he had sent them into Councils.

"My veto of the gas lease," he observed "can only be sent in when Councils are in session."

A good deal hangs on his reasons for removing Smyth and Costello. There are rumors that Smyth's alleged connivance at vice in the so-called "Tenderloin" region of the town may be made to figure. The Anti-Vice Committee, which investigated conditions in that region made a report containing direct charges against Smyth, which the Mayor has not yet acted upon.

Of course, everybody believes that Smyth's removal was made for the reason that he stood with the ring in opposition to the Mayor and in favor of the gas grab. His removal on such a ground, however, would be a ticklish proceeding.

There is every indication that the Mayor really has the ring on the run. Councilmen are deserting Durham at a rapid rate. To pass the gas grab over the Mayor's veto requires a three-fifths vote in each branch of Councils. The Mayor is still about ten votes short of the required number in Select Council and sixteen or seventeen short in Common Council. But the desertions from the ring are so numerous that it looks like a panic, and the sagest political seers cannot figure out any way in which the avalanche can be stopped. The total list of to-day's recruits to the Mayor's cause footed up seven Councilmen. It was the biggest single day's haul.

"Councils" is the Philadelphia name for a city Legislature, corresponding to Senate and House. Each ward has a representative in Select Council, while the representation in Common Council is based on population. A number of the Councilmen are the veriest political hacks and heelers, men who could not get on EXCAVATORS IN A BATTLE.

Locked Out Men Charge Dynamite House Next to New York Hospital.

In a free for all fight at Fifth Avenue and Fifteenth Street early last night between a lot of Italians and policemen several Italians were cut and bruised up so badly that they were taken to the New York Hospital.

At the northwest corner of Fifth Avenue and Fifteenth Street a deep excavation is being made for the twenty-story Stuyvesant Building. The excavating work is being done by the James J. Duffy Company. Four days ago the contractor locked out forty-five excavators and rock workers, most of whom were Italians. Their places were filled by a few Italians and many Swedes.

The discharged laborers, it was said, had been harassing the new workmen in an attempt to scare them off the job. When the forty-five new workmen laid down their picks last evening they were attacked verbally by some dozen or more Italians. Then stones were thrown and stilettos flashed.

Policeman Riordan jumped into the battle. He saw that he was like a haystack to a fire and he called for assistance. Mounted Policeman O'Keefe rode into the fray, brandishing his stick like a sabre. Later a call was sent to the Tenderloin station for the reserves.

In the midst of the fight four Italians charged the dynamite house, which is next to the New York Hospital. Thursday night some one tried to get into the shanty. Joseph F. Tracy, who stands guard at the little house, had his suspicions as to who had been trying to get at the dynamite. So when he saw four Italians make for him he laid about him with his stick. Three went down, but the fourth was pressing Tracy hard when the Italian noticed that his comrades had run. He followed. This started the flight, and most of them got away. The police got two, and locked them up on charges of disorderly conduct.

The trouble between the Contractors' Protective Association and the Rockmen and Excavators' Union, instead of ending in a few days as the contractors expected, is likely to last for many weeks and may stop all new building work. Several thousand more men were ordered out yesterday. Most of these were on excavations for apartment houses.

The first disturbance yesterday was in East One Hundred and Tenth Street, where an excavation is being made for an apartment house. A large crowd of Italians surrounded the new men and began hurling brick bats at them. The invaders were put to rout before the police arrived.

SUES SON FOR $1,000,000.

Jeremiah Fitzpatrick Says Young Man Got All His Property.

Jeremiah Fitzpatrick, formerly head of the Fitzpatrick Glass Manufacturing Company, and who now lives at 76 Columbia Heights, Brooklyn, has brought suit against his son, James Fitzpatrick, and his daughter-in-law, Margaret Fitzpatrick, to recover $1,000,000, which he says belongs to him and of which his son and daughter-in-law retain unlawful possession.

The summons in the action is returnable before Justice Marean in the Supreme Court, in Brooklyn on Friday. It is said that court officers have been unable to serve the summonses upon either Mr. or Mrs. James Fitzpatrick at their home in New Suffolk.

Jeremiah Fitzpatrick, in his complaint, asserts that in 1898 he gave to his son a power of attorney for practically all his property, including the controlling interest in the glass factory, with $500,000 and stocks, bonds, and cash aggregating $500,000 more, the whole to be administered in the interest of the retired manufacturer and his wife.

The complaint further sets forth that because of his son's action in withholding his property and income Mr. Fitzpatrick is left practically without means.

Through his counsel James Fitzpatrick has made a denial of his father's allegations and says he welcomes the opportunity to vindicate himself in court.

DOWIE'S MEXICAN EDEN.

Plan to Tunnel Extinct Volcanoes for Water for 2,000,000 Acres.

Special to The New York Times.

CITY OF MEXICO, May 26.—John Alexander Dowie will secure water to irrigate the 2,000,000 acres of land which he has arranged to purchase in the State of Tamaulipas by tunneling into four extinct volcanoes. The volcanoes are within the boundaries of the tract, and are full of water. Engineers believe that an inexhaustible supply of water will be secured from subterranean sources.

Dowie has agreed to pay $2 Mexican currency per acre, or a total of $4,000,000. He will establish seven cities as well as several agricultural settlements. The Mexican colony will be known as "Eden," so that there may be no confusion with the parent colony in the United States. Dowie announces that mules and hogs will not be allowed within the boundaries of the Mexican tract, and that an attempt will be made to exterminate the fleas and mosquitos.

STORE BLOWN UP.

Owner, a Councilman, Had Been Active in Running Down Thieves.

Special to The New York Times.

STROUDSBURG, Penn., May 26.—A dynamite explosion occurred early this morning in the store building of Councilman H. W. Kistler, and fire which followed destroyed the building and its contents. The explosion and fire caused $20,000 damage. The shock of the explosion was felt many blocks away.

It is believed that some one blew up the store out of revenge on Mr. Kistler. A year ago Mr. Kistler shot a burglar, and the man's friends declared they would square accounts with him. In the last two months the town has suffered no fewer than thirty small robberies, and Councilman Kistler has taken an active part in bringing the guilty persons to justice.

Shaw Not a Candidate?

DES MOINES, Iowa, May 26.—Leslie M. Shaw, Secretary of the Treasury, who was the guest of the Bankers' Club today, repeated his declaration that Government finances were in no danger.

"No one is authorized to say that I will be a candidate for the Presidency," said the Secretary in answer to a question. "It is a subject which I do not care even to discuss."

Regarding the Isthmian canal, Mr. Shaw said:

"I have set an actuary to work figuring the probable fixed charges we will be compelled to meet in the next four years. This will enable Congress at

ENJOINS EQUITABLE FROM MUTUALIZING

Justice Maddox's Decision in Franklin B. Lord's Suit.

CALLS STOCK VOTE PROPERTY

No Amendment to Charter Possible Without Unanimous Vote of Stock —Hyde Trustee Offer Stands.

Declaring that the charter of the Equitable Life Assurance Society could not be amended by the Directors or the stockholders unless by the consent of every share, or even by the Legislature itself, Justice Maddox, in the Supreme Court in Brooklyn yesterday, granted the preliminary injunction sought by Franklin B. Lord restraining the Directors and officers of the Equitable from filing and putting into effect the plan of partial mutualization adopted by the board two months ago. The opinion sustains practically every point argued by Edward M. Shepard, as counsel for Mr. Lord, and by Samuel Untermyer, as counsel for James H. Hyde and William H. McIntyre, the principal intervenors.

Just what the effect of the decision, if sustained by the higher court and followed by a permanent injunction, will be upon the plans of the Hyde and Alexander factions in the Equitable none of the attorneys in the case and none of the principals would venture to predict yesterday. That it took some of the lawyers somewhat by surprise was indicated by the statement of one of Mr. Alexander's legal advisers, who said, when asked what he thought of it:

"It is the most radical decision that could possibly have been made. It becomes even more apparent what the control of $400,000,000 of assets by $100,000 of stock amounts to. If the society ever wants to continue in business some way must be found to get the stock out of the way. Of course we shall appeal, and the case may possibly be argued on the appeal at the June term."

Samuel Untermyer, chief counsel for James H. Hyde, said that the decision went even further than his own contentions in argument before Judge Maddox, and that it was in line with the principle that the courts were bound to uphold, that property rights such as those of stock to control a property cannot be taken away at random. Further than this Mr. Untermyer did not care to discuss the opinion.

It was learned, however, upon authority, that whatever the final action of the courts with regard to the plan of mutualization for the Equitable, James H. Hyde and his advisers intend to abide by the spirit of the offer contained in the amended petition of intervention in the Lord case. In that petition Mr. Hyde contended that the consent of three-fifths of the stock was necessary to mutualization in any event, and he offered, if the proposed amended charter were found to be legal, to vote the holdings which he controls in favor of it at a special meeting to be called. In case the injunction were granted Mr. Hyde proposed, "subject to the determination of details and conditions," to place his stock in the hands of trustees for a period of years, to be voted by them for twenty-eight Directors nominated by the policy holders and twenty-four of his own nomination. This was the division of the board contemplated in the proposed amended charter.

The "determination of details and conditions," of course, leaves the question of a final settlement of the Equitable controversy just as wide open under the Hyde offer as it would be had none such been made. But Mr. Hyde's advisers are determined, regardless of the personal developments incident to the settlement, that the policyholders of the Equitable shall obtain in the end at least the voice in the affairs of the society that would have been theirs had the mutualization plan gone through. It can be asserted positively that the votes of the policy holders will not be thrown into the control of the agency force.

A PROXY COMMITTEE.

The plan that has been most favorably considered is that of forming, under the trusteeship offer, a proxy committee of men of National reputation and asking that these men, qualified as Directors of the society if necessary, serve as Directors, Grover Cleveland being mentioned yesterday as the type of man likely to be approached.

There is another important bearing of the decision. This is upon the plan urged by many of the Directors who constitute what is known as the peace element in the board, that the affairs of the society be placed in the hands of a self-perpetuating board of trustees with powers and responsibilities like those of a savings bank. This plan would be rendered impossible of accomplishment if the injunction were made permanent, for it would involve directly the surrender by the stock of its power of controlling the society.

The decision of Justice Maddox is voluminous. It recites first the legal conditions attending the organization of the Equitable, noting that under the act of 1853 applying to insurance companies it was necessary that the society should be placed on a stock basis, should be subject to the provisions of the Revised Statutes except in regard to annual statements and other matters specifically provided for, and that its charter should "continue until repealed." It is upon this last provision and a provision of the Revised Statutes in effect when the Equitable was founded as modified by subsequent enactments, that Justice Maddox rests his decision on the matter of amendment. The Revised Statutes then provided that at every election of Directors of a moneyed corporation no person except a stockholder should vote for Directors.

The decision continues:

"The charter of a stock corporation is as between the corporation and its stockholders an executed contract; it is a continuing grant of corporate power, and all applicable provisions of a general law under which a corporation has been formed, not expressly set forth in its certificate or articles of incorporation, are to be read into and taken to be a part of its charter. There is in the act of 1853 no express reservation of power to 'alter' or 'amend' the charter of any company 'formed' thereunder, and there is no provision in the charter of the defendant company for an alteration

CALL OUR CONSULS SPIES.

Germans Say Manufacturers Masquerade as Government Experts.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, May 26.—The Society of Berlin Merchants and Manufacturers, of which the leading business men of the German capital are members, had a lively discussion last night on German-American tariff relations.

The American Consular Service was denounced, the conditions prevailing being described as "horrible." It was declared that the Consuls were merely spies to discover German trade secrets and that this was made possible by the invoice system.

It was further asserted that American manufacturers, disguised as experts of the Treasury Department, invaded German factories and that their false testimony was used against American importers.

Secretary Shaw's recent speech was called a "bluff."

FIRE AT FORT WADSWORTH.

Was Near 12-Inch Battery but Far from Ammunition.

A brilliant fire illuminated the Narrows and the Lower Bay about midnight last night. It caused much excitement on Staten Island, but did practically no damage. The fire started in a lot of rubbish at the extreme southern end of the Government Reservation at Fort Wadsworth and spread to an unoccupied frame building on the reservation, which had not been demolished when the new disappearing guns were added to the fort.

The fire was close to a twelve-inch battery, but no ammunition was stored within several thousand feet of the fire. The entire garrison returned to fight the fire, as did Red Jacket Hose Company of South Beach. At the same time an alarm was turned into the South Shore Department from South Beach, and every piece of apparatus from Tompkinsville eastward responded. The fire was practically burned out before the firemen reached the scene. The origin of the fire is not known. The loss is nothing, as the Government would have demolished the building or allowed it to fall to ruin in any event.

HARRIMAN TO STEP DOWN.

Not to Act as President of His Roads —To Head Boards.

It was learned yesterday that the plans of E. H. Harriman for the railroad properties in which he is the dominant factor contemplate his retirement as President of the four important roads of which he is now the head and his assumption of the office of Chairman of the various Boards of Directors. Mr. Harriman is now President of the Union Pacific, the Southern Pacific, the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company, and Oregon Short Line, as well as of several of the companies subordinate to the principal Harriman roads.

It was explained yesterday by representatives of the Union Pacific interests that Mr. Harriman's plans are to have separate heads of the different roads, the general policy of which he will control as Chairman of their Boards of Directors. He took the Presidency of the Union Pacific after the resignation of Horace G. Burt only temporarily, and because another available man could not be found at the time. The plans of executive reorganization have not been worked out yet, but it is thought likely that A. L. Mohler, now a Vice President of the Union Pacific, will become President of that road; that General Manager Calvin of the Southern Pacific will head that company, and that W. H. Bancroft, another Vice President of the Union Pacific, will be made President of the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company.

LOST $48,000 AT POKER.

Did It in One Night, Says Cohen, Whom Creditors Press.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 26.—It cost Jacob Cohen, a Jacksonville (Ill.) merchant, $48,000, he says, to play poker one night in Chicago. He told Bankruptcy Referee E. S. Robinson the particulars to-day.

Creditors of Cohen are trying to discover the whereabouts of $61,000 which the merchant is charged with having disposed of. A petition in bankruptcy was filed in Jacksonville, whence he departed some months ago having, according to report, $61,000 in checks in his possession. At the examination before the referee, Cohen said he had lost the money gambling.

Attorney Worthington said Cohen asserted that when he came to Chicago he met an affable stranger who introduced him to several other persons and they entered a gambling room, where he lost $48,000. He said we went to Terre Haute afterward and lost $13,000 in another game.

Dentist to Marry Mayor Clarke's Daughter, Who Became Nurse.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ROCHELLE, May 26.—The engagement of Miss Mabel Elizabeth Clarke, daughter of Mayor Henry S. Clarke of New Rochelle, and Dr. Charles Peck Sniffen, which was announced to-day, came as a surprise to many in New Rochelle. Only a few months ago Miss Clarke, who had been prominent in many of the social affairs in New Rochelle, announced that she had decided to become a trained nurse. She was so infatuated with the work that she began a course in St. Luke's Hospital. She remained at the hospital until the work began to tell on her health and she was obliged to return home.

Dr. Sniffen is a young dentist. He met Miss Clarke at a dance which was given in her honor when she announced her intention of giving up society to become a nurse. No date for the wedding has been set.

DOUGLAS TIRES OF OFFICE.

Massachusetts's Governor Declares He Will Not Again Be a Candidate.

BOSTON, May 26.—In a letter to John J. Flaherty of Gloucester, Chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee, Gov. William L. Douglas to-day announced his decision not to be a candidate for re-election. Gov. Douglas says he has no taste for office holding, much preferring his business and home life to public responsibilities.

The Massachusetts Legislature adjourned to-day.

NEW P. R. R. BRIDGE BLOWNUP BY DYNAMITE

Steel Draw Over Hackensack River Wrecked at 1:30 A. M.

EXPLOSION HEARD FOR MILES

Officials Unable to Account for It—Trains Had Not Yet Begun to Cross the Structure.

The new steel drawbridge of the Pennsylvania Railroad over the Hackensack River, at the foot of Newark Avenue, Jersey City, was blown up by dynamite at 1:30 o'clock this morning.

The extent of the explosion was not definitely known by the railroad officials at 3 o'clock.

The explosion was terrific. It made a big noise in the centre of Jersey City, three or four miles from the bridge.

The river at the point where the bridge crossed, is 200 feet wide.

The bridge was not complete. No trains had, of course, been on it. The old bridge, which the new structure paralleled, is still in use.

As far as the railroad men heard at 3 A. M. nobody was hurt.

What caused the explosion Pennsylvania officials said they did not know. They said that no labor troubles had arisen from the work on the bridge. The explosion might have been an accident, they said.

As soon as the railroad police heard of the explosion they sent word to the police of all the nearby towns requesting that all suspicious characters be rounded up and held.

EXPLOSION SHAKES A BLOCK.

Dynamite Blown Up at Pennsylvania Railroad Excavation.

Sergt. Maher of the West Thirty-seventh Street station was entering the pedigree of a prisoner about 3:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon when his chair began to rock. Simultaneously he heard a loud detonation like thunder. When he had collected his wits he decided that there had been an explosion somewhere in the neighborhood and hurried out the reserves.

The explosion was near Thirty-first Street, between Eighth and Ninth Avenues, in the great open space between the North River and Sixth Avenue and Thirty-first and Thirty-third Streets. Several accidents have occurred there since the blasting began for the foundations of the great Pennsylvania Railroad Station. Yesterday's touched the top notch, however, in the damage it did. Nobody was seriously hurt, but several persons were toppled over, one old woman was prostrated, pictures were shaken from the walls, statuary from shelves, and about 500 panes of glass shattered.

The block on Thirty-first Street, between Eighth and Ninth Avenues, suffered most. The excavating is being done close up to these buildings, and the fronts of most of them had already been blown in before yesterday's accident. After yesterday's explosion the houses between Nos. 339 and 366 had few window panes left.

Miss Amelia Pope, who lives at No. 344 with her mother and sister, was dressing in her room on the third floor about 3:30 o'clock. She happened to look out of the window, which overlooks the torn-up space.

"I saw a little wooden box standing on a rocky point," she said, "and it was burning. 'I hope it isn't dynamite,' I said to myself. But the idea had hardly come into my head when it blew up with a terrible report. I was thrown off my feet."

A little to the west, in the house at 358, live Morgan Williams and his wife. Mr. Williams is seventy years old and his wife sixty-eight. Mrs. Williams was prostrated by the shock. Mrs. Frederick, who lives at 362, was thrown out of bed.

Between the shored-up buildings and the excavation a narrow sidewalk has been constructed. On this a man and a woman were walking when the explosion took place. The man wore glasses. A flying splinter struck them, and one of his eyes was slightly cut. He got away before the police had a chance to get his name.

The police had a hard time of it trying to get at the cause of the explosion. The first policeman who undertook the investigation interviewed almost every foreman he could find connected with the New York Construction Company and went back to the still nervous Sergt. Maher confessing that he could learn nothing.

Another policeman learned that across the excavation a track has been laid on which runs a little steam engine used for hauling stones and dirt. Sparks from this engine, which runs close by the spot where Miss Pope saw the box, he deduced, set the box on fire. It contained explosives and the crash followed.

St. Michael's Church and parochial school, at the corner of Ninth Avenue and Thirty-first Street, suffered some damage in the way of broken windows. Windows were also smashed in several stores along Ninth Avenue and in the asylum for the blind, at Ninth Avenue and Thirty-third Street.

CROWD MENACES MOTORMAN.

Truck Driver and His Little Son Hurt by Collision.

John Gilfoyle, a truck driver of 12 Morton Street, was giving his little son, Frank, a ride on the high seat of his wagon last night at 8 o'clock. A southbound Sixth Avenue car ran into the truck at Thirty-ninth Street. The father and son were hurled to the ground and the motorman was flung against the end of his car with terrific force. The five-year-old lad was taken away to the New York Hospital with concussion of the brain. The father was sent to the same place unconscious.

Seeing that a little boy had been injured by the collision a crowd of several hundred people gathered around the car, angrily denouncing the motorman. The passengers climbed out of the car, which had been knocked from the track by the shock.

Policemen Colyer, Brady, and Dunne kept the crowd back. When arrested the motorman said he was John Dougherty of 1,707 Lexington Avenue. He said he had been in the service more than forty [illegible] He, too, was sent to the New York

CUP FOR J. P. MORGAN, $81,375

Sixteenth Century Crystal Object Brings Record Figure in London.

LONDON, May 26.—A small sixteenth century Italian drinking cup carved out of rock crystal and mounted and enameled with gold was sold at auction this afternoon for the remarkable price of £16,275, ($81,375.)

It is stated that the cup was purchased for J. Pierpont Morgan of New York. It belonged to John Gabbittas of London, who placed the reserve price at only £5,000.

There has been much discussion as to the genuineness of the cup, but the British Museum has pronounced it genuine.

The bidding was fast and furious from £500 to £10,000, but thenceforward the duel was between two prominent London dealers.

It is believed that $81,375 is the highest price ever paid for a single object of art in an English auction room.

TRAFFIC BILL SIGNED.

Measure Empowering New York Police to Control Vehicles Becomes Law.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, May 26.—Gov. Higgins signed the McAdoo Street Traffic Regulation bill to-day. It authorizes the police of New York City "to regulate, direct, control and restrict the movement of all teams, horses, carts, wagons, automobiles, and all other vehicles in streets, bridges, squares, parks, and public places for the facilitation of traffic and the convenience of the public."

Under the law the Police Commissioner may make such rules and regulations for the conduct of traffic in streets as he may deem necessary.

POLICEMAN SHOT DEAD.

Was Answering Woman's Call for Help in Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, May 26.—Sub-Policeman Matthew J. Curren was shot and instantly killed to-night at the door of a house when responding to a call for help from an old woman living in the northeastern section of the city. The shot, it is alleged, was fired by Charles Streeper, aged thirty-two years, son of the woman to whose aid the policeman had gone.

Streeper could not be found after the shooting. According to the police, he had quarreled with his mother and became so abusive that she called for assistance.

OPERATION ON MRS. PHIPPS.

Patient Said to be Doing Well at a Long Island Hospital.

Special to The New York Times.

DENVER, May 26.—Mrs. Genevieve C. Phipps has been seriously ill in a New York hospital for the past fornight. Friends of Mrs. Phipps were notified a week ago that she had undergone an operation and was at a hospital on Long Island. They have been in constant communication with her physicians since and have been advised of every turn of the case.

Although Mrs. Phipps has been ill, she has at no time been in danger, and as soon as possible she will return to Colorado. She went to New York to get the services of a specialist for the purpose of having a growth removed from her neck. The operation was more severe than anticipated, but was successful.

THE MOST LAWLESS NATION.

Free Religious Association Speaker Thus Characterizes America.

BOSTON, May 26.—At the meeting of the Free Religious Association to-day Edwin D. Mead said:

"We meet at a time when there is coming to a climax perhaps the grossest instance of municipal corruption and robbery which has ever been seen in American life; I mean the condition of things in Philadelphia to-day. But municipal corruption is not the only evil whose shame has burned itself into our souls. Race hatred in this country is almost unparalleled. There is no nation calling itself civilized where lawlessness in all departments of life is so general.

"This condition has come very largely from our great materialism, and it is for the leaders of religious opinion to stir up such a feeling in this country as shall lead to reform in this respect."

JUDGE REBUKES JEROME.

District Attorney Seeks Notoriety, He Says, in Sentencing Levin.

Louis Levin, convicted of obtaining merchandise by fraud, was sentenced by Judge Foster in General Sessions yesterday to not less than three years and not more than thirty-seven months in prison. Assistant District Attorney Hart said the case was of such importance that the maximum sentence of five years should be imposed. Judge Foster thought differently.

"You would not make such a statement were it not that the District Attorney is seeking newspaper notoriety," he said.

Levin conducted an establishment at 119 Bleecker Street. His failure two years ago resulted in an investigation, which showed that great quantities of the goods in his store were later secretly transferred to Indianapolis.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 26.—As the result of information received at the Admiralty a high naval official expresses the belief that a naval battle is bound to occur within three or four days.

Whence the information comes he cannot divulge, nor is he able to confirm the report of the arrival of Volunteer Fleet cruisers at Woo-Sung.

Naval circles generally are convinced that Rojestvensky will do his best to find Togo. The belief is based chiefly on knowledge of Rojestvensky's personal characteristics.

I am authorized to deny the story of the purchase of Argentine warships by Bulgaria for Russia.

WILL INVADE MONGOLIA.

Russia Will Change Boundary and Stop Flanking Movement.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cable. Copyright, 1905.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 26.—Information communicated to me by the Foreign Office prompts the belief that the operations in Manchuria will shortly assume a novel phase and that Russian troops will cross into Mongolia to checkmate the flanking movement the Japanese are believed to have undertaken beyond the Manchurian borders.

Diplomatic negotiations with a view to enabling Gen. Linevitch to move in this direction without violating neutrality began in Peking three weeks ago.

When operations were transferred to the north the Russians discovered that the frontier line between Manchuria and Mongolia was too vague, and decided to fix the boundaries, proposing a line running about twenty miles west of Tie Pass, whereas the maps published by the Russian General Staff show a frontier line about sixty miles west of Tie Pass.

The amended delimitation would naturally make it almost impossible for the Japanese to effect a flanking movement except by violating the neutral territory of Mongolia.

Japan made no reply to the Russian proposals. Russia thereupon twice urged Peking to obtain an answer, and finally, a few days ago, notified the Chinese Government that in view of Japan's silence she considered herself at liberty to take such steps as she deemed fit in order to safeguard her interests, including the passage of Russian troops through Mongolian territory.

Russia's decision to invade Mongolia evokes a sentiment akin to consternation among the Diplomatic Corps. It is regarded as a first step toward the annexation of Chinese territory, which opens up the question of the partition of the Celestial Empire.

Two Japanese Companies Annihilated and Two Guns Captured.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 26.—News of a successful cavalry raid by Gen. Mistchenko comes in the following dispatch from Gen. Linevitch to the Emperor, dated May 25:

On May 18 squadrons of the vanguard succeeded in reaching the Pakoman Road, where they burned stores and a depot, and destroyed the telegraph for a considerable distance. GAS RING ASSAILED AT BIG MASS MEETING

Stirring Scenes in Philadelphia Academy of Music.

WOMEN EARNEST AS MEN

Charles Emory Smith Denounces Lease Plan as Foul Robbery—Audience Cheers for Root.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 20.—There were three anti-gas lease mass meetings to-night, the greatest of which was at the Academy of Music, where the speakers were ex-Postmaster General Charles Emory Smith, Dr. S. Solis Cohen, Bishop Mackay-Smith, Frank M. Riter, and William T. Tilden. That hall is supposed to hold 2,500 people, but there were fully 3,000 in it. It has three galleries, and from gallery to gallery were rows of handsomely dressed women and their escorts, all carrying American flags.

Whenever anything occurred to stir their enthusiasm, which was often, the whole audience would rise to its feet and shout, frantically waving the flags. It was one of the prettiest and most thrilling scenes imaginable, and not the least notable and significant feature was the desperate earnestness of the women.

Before the meeting began some one started singing "We'll Hang Tom Dolan on a Sour Apple Tree," and immediately everybody, women and all, took it up. Dolan is President of the United Gas Improvement Company. Then Durham's name was made a target for hisses and groans, after this fashion:

"Izzy! Is he? Was he?"

Then they sang "The Star-Spangled Banner," everybody rising while it was sung, and then the "Battle Hymn of the Republic"—"Mine Eyes Have Seen the Glory of the Coming of the Lord."

And there were parodies on the famous patriotic songs, and these were not the least in awakening enthusiasm. One was "My City, 'Tis of Thee," after "America," and another was a new version of "Rally Round the Flag," which ended like this:

Out with the traitors! Fire the whole crew!
Fight for the triumph of good men and true,
While we rally 'round the Mayor, boys, we rally 'round the Mayor,
Shouting the civic cry of freedom.

Ex-Postmaster General Charles Emory Smith spoke in part as follows:

"The question of defeating the gas steal and redeeming the city is not a question of politics. It is above all narrow partisanship. It rises to the loftier altitude of the citizens' conscientious duties and the highest civic obligation. An attempt is made by the plunderers to shield their raid under the name of the party organization, and now that they stand trembling before the storm of popular wrath they seek to defend themselves and hold their quaking and deserting followers under the plea that the party organization is at stake.

"On the 27th of June, 1901, a town meeting, of a character not unlike the present one, was held in the same Academy of Music. A District Attorney [Rothermel] had dared to do his duty in a momentous public trial. In what seemed to be a determination to punish him for his conscientious fulfilment of his duty the organization had refused to give him a renomination. The independent and high-minded people were indignant at this act and met to express their sense of a public wrong and, if need be, to raise the flag of revolt.

"I was asked to come from Washington to address that meeting. Circumstances were such that I could not leave my post, but, after careful deliberation, I deemed it a matter of duty to take a position and send a telegram to be read at the meeting which should indicate sympathy and approval.

"On the following day I went to the President and said to him: 'Mr. President, you see what I have done. I deliberately and studiously avoided saying a word to you in advance. I felt that the act ought to be mine alone. But I do not wish you to be embarrassed, and if this action of one of your official family involves any embarrassment, my resignation is at your disposal.'

"All this thus far is of no importance. What follows is important. Instantly the President answered: 'My friend, you are a citizen of Philadelphia. Your duty as a citizen is a matter for your own judgment. If you feel that you have done your duty you have acted rightly, and you have my approval.'

"That was the word of the great, whitesouled William McKinley.

"I deny the right of the conspirators who are banded together to gag and plunder our fair city to speak in a party name. The black flag of piracy is not the flag of Republicanism, and they shall not cloak the foulest robbery under the mantle of party loyalty is an unholy desecration, and it is the highest duty of free men to repudiate the crime and rescue the city from the thralldom.

"Our whole character as free men is at stake. The crime against which we have risen is the most stupendous robbery which has ever been undertaken in municipal history. But unparalleled as it stands in the record of pillage, the issue is beyond and above all question of dollars. Our manhood, our honor, the very fibre of our being, are all on trial.

"In such a crisis, where the highest interests of the city are at stake, where the support of a Mayor who has boldly stood forth as a public champion is involved, and where your rights and honor constitute the issue, you are justified in saying to your representatives:

"'You cannot safely betray us. We demand that you shall stand with the people against the plunderers. We shall observe the law. We shall respect the restraints of an orderly community. But if you persist in trying to bind us in the grasp of bandits we shall show you how self-respecting and self-defending men can deal with you. Make your choice.'

"If that spirit shall grow during the next week as it has during the last, we shall attain this iniquity and win a complete and glorious victory."

Mr. Tilden mentioned that there had been some criticism of Mayor Weaver for going outside of Philadelphia to engage counsel. He said that it was impossible to get a lawyer of the right size in Philadelphia who would take the case. "Many were called, but they had already been chosen," he said, "and so Elihu Root—"

He got no further, for at that name the whole audience rose to its feet, waving flags and shouting "Hurrah for Root!"

Mr. Tilden warned the audience that the ring's tricks were not yet exhausted. "You think Councils will not meet till Thursday," he said. "They can meet next Monday. They will leave no trick untried. Every Philadelphian must be a minuteman."

The following resolution was adopted amid tremendous cheering:

"Resolved, That we, citizens of Philadelphia, without regard to party or politics, do hereby pledge each and each pledge our life, liberty, and sacred honor to the complete overthrow of despotic methods in municipal affairs and the restoration of those principles for which our fathers fought, and which shall over be our glory while we remain worthy to be called their children."

The following resolutions were also adopted:

Resolved, By the citizens of Philadelphia in this town meeting assembled, that the hour has now struck when the people of Philadelphia, with the voice as of one man, demand that henceforth and forever the will of the people shall be supreme; and be it further

Resolved, That we heartily commend the courage, fidelity, and good common sense of John Weaver, Mayor of Philadelphia, in removing from office men who have openly trampled on the rights of the people whose servants they are, and who have shamelessly obeyed the commands of irresponsible and self-seeking bosses."

A letter written by W. W. Justice, a wool merchant, who acted as Chairman of the meeting, was read. In it he suggested the raising of $1,250,000 to carry on an extensive campaign against the organization and pledging himself to contribute liberally to the fund.

Equal enthusiasm was displayed at the other two meetings. The Y. M. C. A. hall was taxed to its capacity when Mahlon N. Kline, the Chairman of the meeting, called the assemblage there to order. Addresses were made by a half dozen prominent citizens, including Charles Emory Smith. The resolutions adopted at the Academy meeting were read by Secretary Tilden, and adopted with a rousing cheer.

In Broad Street several thousand persons gathered who could not gain admittance to the big Academy building. Word was sent inside and three speakers were sent out to address the crowd from a barouche. There was much enthusiasm, and Mayor Weaver's name was cheered every time it was mentioned. The outdoor meeting closed with the singing of "Near-er, My God, to Thee" and "My Country, 'Tis of Thee."

a Tammany ticket in New York, and who could not earn a day's livelihood at a trade. But even these men are being scared out by the dimensions of the uprising.

People Hunt Councilmen.

The scenes that have been enacted here in the past few days in connection with these Councilman would furnish a good plot for a comic opera. The Councilmen have been hunted like wild game by indignant citizens. Out in the suburbs citizens' committees have patrolled the roads for hours in front of the houses of scared Councilmen, who did not dare come home.

Councilmen have been hunted in automobiles at dead of night. The instructive spectacle has been presented of representatives of the people fleeing down dark roads, while behind them went the relentless avengers in automobiles and cabs, remorselessly running them down and forcing upon them protests against the gas grab.

One Councilman was haled out of bed at 5 o'clock in the morning, and, shivering in his nightshirt, stood on a doorstep while his neighbors, who had been up all night trying to find him, surrounded him, cut off retreat, and forced him to listen to a warning against opposing the Mayor in the gas grab matter.

Another was captured while out walking with his wife. He flamed up, declared his detention an outrage, and attempted to assault the leader of his neighbors. The police stepped in, and the Councilman had to listen to the Declaration of Independence which his neighbors had framed up. His wife counseled peace, and the militant Councilman, who had started out by trying to fight, wound up by meekly accepting the bill of rights and saying that he would "think over it."

Such scenes and many other equally bizarre are hourly features of the great hunt for Councilmen. These illustrations may give some idea why it is that even ignorant party hacks who have all their lives looked to the organization and not to the people for orders are getting frightened and beginning to desert the ring.

One of these recruits, a Common Councilman who had just surrendered, was carried into the presence of the Mayor by victorious neighbors. At their head was the Select Councilman from that ward, who has been on the Mayor's side all along. They brought their conquest into the audience chamber, and there the Common Councilman meekly handed in his capitulation to the Mayor in the presence of all his neighbors and friends.

But without doubt the strongest and most striking illustration of the way public sentiment is aroused was furnished in the case of a Common Councilman who came into the Mayor's office to-day with tears in his eyes to give in his surrender.

Gave In for Children's Sake.

"I was against you and with the organization," he said, "and nothing on earth—that you could have done would have made me break with Durham. There's only one thing that could tear me away from him, and that is what happened. My little children came home from school yesterday crying, and when my wife and I tried to find out what was the matter, they sobbed out that the other children had been pointing their fingers at them, refusing to associate with them or play with them, and shouting out: 'Your father's a gas thief!' I can't stand that, and I'll vote your way, Mr. Mayor, although it breaks me all up to cut loose from Durham."

The unparalleled scenes of yesterday were repeated to-day and emphasized. When the Mayor went out for luncheon he had to contend with a crowd bigger than that of yesterday. By the time he got to Chestnut Street the whole trolley system was tied up and nobody could get anywhere. On the steps of the Union League were numbers of well-dressed men and women waiting to receive him, but the Mayor did not go there. He went on down Broad Street.

"He's going to Tom Dolan's," the crowd yelled, and the Mayor burst into a rollicking laugh. He turned down Walnut Street, and there the ovation outdid anything of the kind ever seen here. All along the way the windows were thrown open and women leaned out, waving handkerchiefs and calling out words of encouragement. Mr. Weaver got redder in the face than ever, and raised his hat to his feminine supporters.

Finally he stopped at the University Club, where the crowd banked him in and gave him three cheers. The club members came charging out and formed a guard of honor for him. The Mayor could not get into the clubhouse until he had worn his hand out shaking with the members.

With him were Directors Potter and Acker, and the three got a breathing spell while they ate their luncheon. When they came out the crowd differed in character from any of the previous mobs that have given Weaver Roman triumphs whenever he left his office. Fully half of them were women, and the rest were well-dressed men. They raised a rapturous cheer and pressed forward. The Mayor bowed and fled precipitately into the clubhouse. It was plain to be seen that he would have the time of his life getting back to the City Hall in time to do any work. Finally he sent for a hansom and dashed for it amid the cheering throngs.

When the Mayor neared the City Hall, and just as the crowd had tested its lungs to the fullest extent in a tremendous cheer for him, a young man on the outskirts shouted shrilly, "Three cheers for Durham!" There was no cheer in response, but the mob made a rush for the Durhamite, picked him up, and hurled him into the street.

Then various individuals yelled, "Hank him! Duck him! Ride him on a rail!" and another rush was made for him, but the youth picked himself up, wriggled out of the grasp of the man who first seized him, and legged it up the street at a pace which notified those who was not on wheels could dream of overtaking.

At the City Hall another crowd was waiting for the Mayor. It was impossible to get to the elevator, and Weaver walked up the stairs. The stairways in this enormous building are as massive as everything else and are full of turns. Every time the Mayor's square face appeared at one of these turns the crowd would have a spasm of temporary insanity.

Then the people rushed up the stairs after him, merged into another crowd that was waiting in the corridor, and swarmed up to the door of the Mayor's office. It stood cheering for a few minutes, and then a man with a powerful voice struck up "The Star-Spangled Banner." Everybody joined in, and the National song almost rent the roof. The man with this stentorian voice then started "The Red, White, and Blue," and the crowd went with him for a line or two, but at the words "the army and navy forever" it balked on the ground of inappropriateness. It could see a reason for singing "our flag is still there," but declined to sing any songs that did not bear directly on the situation. Instead it cheered some more.

Then half a dozen pretty girls summoned up courage and walked into the Mayor's office. The crowd followed them and followed, surging into the office like an ocean wave. There the people stood and yelled, "Speech!" but the Mayor did not come out from his private room, and only after a half hour or so the crowd melted away.

Enthusiastic High School Girls.

As soon as school was out a band of young girls from the High School bustled down to the City Hall and begged to be allowed to see the Mayor. He happened to be stepping out of his office just as they preferred this request, or they might have been disappointed. As it was, they swarmed around him without waiting for his permission, and grasped his hand, telling him how much they were interested in his fight and bidding him Godspeed. The oldest of them was not more than fifteen, and their earnest enthusiasm was a sight worth seeing.

The impeachment movement met a snag to-day. Durham and his lieutenants have not given it up, but the outlook has become discouraging that there is no use in their talk of it. They are afraid that neither the courts nor Councils can be relied upon, and that in any case the impeachment would be a boomerang. Yet they will carry it through if there seems to be the ghost of a chance.

United States Senator Penrose was closeted in his office with the ring chiefs again to-day, trying to devise some way of suppressing Weaver. He did not seem to be meeting with much success. It is said that he and Durham have called upon the veteran Col. Alex K. McClure for advice. For forty years McClure has been the adviser of political leaders, and there is no man in whose words more weight is attached.

The ring is threatening to have the Councils hold up the confirmations of Directors Potter and Acker. If they do, the Mayor can send in the names over and over again, according to well-settled precedent in the Pennsylvania courts, and he will do so.

It is a question whether they could draw salaries if they were confirmed, though it is held by good lawyers that they could; but Rudolph Blankenburg has promised to personally guarantee their salaries, though he is not a rich man. He is a business man, not a politician, and an active reformer. If there should be any real question of the right of Potter and Acker to draw salaries, there will be a rush to share in the honor of guaranteeing them, and Blankenburg will be asked to divide it with many others.

The first act of the new reform administration was to strike a blow at the ring's contacts. Director Acker sent a letter to Samuel Sutcliff, one of the ward bosses, who is Chief of the Bureau of Highways, annulling the advertisement requesting proposals for street cleaning for 1906, which were to have been opened June 1 next. Sutcliff was ordered to return all proposals and discontinue the advertisements.

According to report, the ring is to be struck in one of its vital places, the contracts. Most of the ring's money-making power is located there. McNichol, who next to Durham is the head of the ring, has a great filtration contract with the city, and was trying to get the street-cleaning contract. He will certainly lose the latter, although the filtration contract has gone too far to be stopped.

What will happen next in the contract situation is giving the ring more concern than any other feature of the fight except the gas matter.

The ring stocks, United Gas and Philadelphia Electric, have been declining with a persistence that indicates the way the situation is turning in the minds of the men on the Street. United Gas was dropping yesterday, but 101¾ was the closing price, while to-day it was as low as 101¼. The decline in Philadelphia Electric was sympathetic, and its 4 per cent. bonds dropped to 76⅝, as compared with 78¼ yesterday. Both stocks were heavily sold.

Such tangible evidences as this of the way people are figuring on the outcome of the fight have aided powerfully in discouraging the ring and have done their part in dampening the impeachment talk.

Mass Meeting Here for Mayor Weaver.

Under the auspices of the People's Institute, the Reform Club, and other civic organizations, a mass meeting will be held at Cooper Union on Wednesday evening next at 8 o'clock. The purpose of the meeting is to send a message of encouragement and greeting to Mayor Weaver and the citizens of Philadelphia in their fight against corrupt ring government.

GIRL DEAD FROM GAS.

Theory That Thieves Turned It On—Her Parents Are Ill.

That burglars, having robbed the flat of Luigi Calabrese, 306 East One Hunderd and Fourteenth Street, of $175, then turned on the gas, causing the death of Calabrese's sixteen-year-old daughter and imperiling the lives of her parents, is the theory on which the police of the East One Hundred and Fourth Street Station are working.

The parents were taken to the Harlem Hospital yesterday in a critical condition and the girl died while the ambulance surgeon was working with her.

Calabrese is a prosperous fruit dealer and his daughter was to have been married next month. On Thursday evening the family visited Antonio Floria, a son-in-law of Calabrese, who lives in the neighborhood. While there the elder man displayed a quantity of bank notes which he had in a wallet, remarking to Floria that it amounted in all to $175.

Returning home, the family entertained several friends and retired shortly after midnight. Nothing more was heard of them until Mrs. Tasia, a neighbor, called at the house yesterday morning and was surprised to find her friends were not yet out of bed. After repeatedly rapping on the door she hastened to summon Floria, who lives at 2,017 First Avenue. They went back to the apartment together, and finding the door bolted on the inside Floria entered the rear window by way of the fire-escape. He was almost overcome by the fumes of gas, which filled the apartments.

A hasty glance, however, sufficed to reveal the two elderly occupants lying unconscious on the bed. The girl was in her own room and showed no signs of life.

Policeman Marx of the East One Hundred and Fourth Street Station sent for an ambulance from Harlem Hospital. On the arrival of Dr. Dimmick restoratives were applied, and all three victims responded faintly. The girl, however, who had been in a small, close room, died under treatment. The father and mother were taken to the hospital, where it was said last evening that they had a fighting chance for life. The gas jet had been turned on full, and a search of Calabrese's clothes and the apartments revealed only a dollar bill and some small change.

Floria reported to Police Captain Brennan of the East One Hundred and Fourth Street Station that the $175 which Calabrese had had the previous evening was missing, and that he believed his father-in-law had been robbed and the gas turned on to hide the crime.

Capt. Brennan detailed several detectives on the case.

MR. HAY MUST STILL REST.

Does Not Expect to Resume Official Work Till Autumn.

BAD NAUHEIM, May 26.—Secretary Hay has finished the course of baths here and will start to-morrow for Paris, where Mrs. Hay awaits him.

Prof. Groedel is quite satisfied with the effects the baths have had on Mr. Hay, but he has advised him to abstain from all official work for several months, such a course being usually necessary after the treatment here. Secretary Hay expects, therefore, to spend the Summer at his country home and to remain there until the Autumn.

Emperor William invited Mr. Hay to go to Wiesbaden and visit him, but the Secretary declined on the advice of his physician. King Edward also invited Mr. Hay to an audience, but this invitation also was declined.

During his visits to London and Paris Secretary Hay will remain very quiet, and he will make no formal official calls. The call of King Leopold of Belgium upon him yesterday took the Secretary completely by surprise, as the visit was not announced beforehand.

OPERATION ON MORGAN.

Elections Superintendent Is Said to be Doing Well.

An operation for appendicitis was performed on Superintendent of Elections George W. Morgan at Roosevelt Hospital yesterday afternoon.

The operation was performed by Dr. Tect of the hospital staff and was successful. Mr. Morgan was removed from his home, in West Fifty-fifth Street, to the hospital on Thursday afternoon. He was said to be doing well after the operation.

or—amendment thereof, save that, by appropriate action of the Board of Directors, the number of the Directors may be diminished and certain life policy holders may be accorded the right to vote in person for Directors; but the by-laws, rules, and regulations of the company may be amended or repealed by the Board of Directors.

Justice Maddox then discusses at length the reserve power of the Legislature under the Constitution of 1846 to alter or amend "all general laws or special statutes" passed pursuant to the general corporation laws, holding that the amendatory power is clearly restricted to the laws or statutes and does not extend to the charters of corporations created under the general laws. The famous case of the People vs. O'Brien, growing out of the repeal of the charter of the Broadway surface railway, is cited and the language of that decision quoted that "the repeal of a law authorizing corporations would not destroy organizations formed under it, nor would the annulment of a charter affect the law under which it was created."

Section of Charter Void.

Taking up the question of the property rights of the stockholders in the control of the corporation, Justice Maddox reviews the development of the statutes bearing upon the provision of the act of 1853 restricting to stockholders the power of voting for Directors, and remarks that inasmuch as the section of the existing charter of the society giving the Directors power to bestow the right to vote in person upon policy holders of $5,000 and upward is inconsistent with the provisions of the act under which the society was founded, even that is null and void. He then continues:

"The question now to be considered is whether the proposed amended charter is violative of the protection given by the Federal and State Constitutions, it being claimed by the stockholders now before the court that the contemplated change will deprive them of property and of property rights.

"The stockholders of the defendant company are members of the corporation, are the equitable owners of the corporate property, and the right of a stockholder to vote upon his holdings of stock is a property right, 'one of the essential rights of ownership'; hence the right of a stockholder to participate in the selection of those who are to be vested with the exercise of the corporate powers, the Board of Directors, is an attribute to his shares of stock, which has been 'defined as a right which its owner has in the management, profits, and ultimate assets of the corporation.'

Stock Vote Is Property.

"In an election for Directors of a stock corporation, unless the charter otherwise provides, the share of stock is the voting unit, and, in the absence of some controlling statutory, charter, or by-law restriction, the right of the stockholder 'to vote his shares at corporate elections is an incident of the ownership of the shares; it inheres in the legal holder of them under the principles of the common law, and is in the nature of property.'

"The persons who originally subscribed and paid for shares of the defendant company's capital stock did so, it is to be presumed, upon the faith of the declaration of incorporation, the provisions of the law under which the company was formed, and also the provisions of the revised statutes applicable thereto, which assured to the stockholder by reason of his right to vote for all the Directors that measure of participation in the control and management of the corporation, its property and affairs. Those to-day holding such shares of stock have the same right to rely upon such provisions of law and of the charter, save as they have been within constitutional limitations amended or repealed.

"By such declaration of incorporation and such provisions of law each stockholder has the right to vote for all the Directors, each of whom shall be the owner of at least five shares of such capital stock. The Board of Directors is to elect annually 'from among their number a President,' and this insures the selection of a stockholder as President. It is now proposed that the stockholders shall have the right to vote for and to elect but six-thirteenths in number of the Directors hereafter to be elected, and if the board shall consist of fifty-two persons, then the stockholders may, by a plurality of their votes, in person or by proxy, elect twenty-four only, and in that ratio if the number be diminished, but such 'proportions shall not be changed without the consent of three-fifths of the stock of the company.' Thus the stockholder has lost the right to vote for all, and as well a majority of the Directors, and that would prevent him from exercising one of the essential rights of ownership, viz.: That of voting on his stock for all Directors to be elected.

Directors Are Agents.

With regard to the limitations of the duties and powers of Directors, Judge Maddox says:

"Directors of a corporation are not vested with the 'title to the property of the corporation. * * * They are agents of the corporation upon whom the duties devoive of management and care,' the exercise of corporate powers for the benefit of the equitable owners of the corporate property, the stockholders. The Directors are the trustees and the stockholders are the cestuis que trust.

"On the argument it was asserted by both sides that there were upward of six hundred thousand policy holders, scattered all over the world. That being so, the right to vote by proxy relieves those not living conveniently near to the place of annual meetings from the necessity of travel. But assume, for the sake of argument, that a majority of the policy holders availing themselves of the voting privilege, waiving for the time the question of legality, vote by proxy and such proxies are controlled by persons whose interests and desires may be inimical to the rights and interests of the stockholders, and the opportunity for the absolute loss of control by the stockholders is presented.

Would Rights Be Destroyed?

"Consider the possibility; there would be the policy holders' majority, twenty-eight to twenty-four, as the board is proposed to be constituted, with the selection by that majority of a policy holder for President and the filling of the offices of the company with policy holders or persons not stockholders, and then calmly answer the question, Have the property rights of the stockholders been invaded or destroyed?

"It is not to be argued that such a situation is probable, but it is possible, and then the right of dominion over the management, profits, and ultimate assets of the company would be lost to those who can only look for that which their shares of stock represent, at least the par value, after every debt and liability of every nature, contingent included, have been fully paid and discharged.

"It is unnecessary on this motion to express any opinion as to the rights of either the policy holders or stockholders to the surplus or any part thereof. Indeed, the policy holders are not before the court, none having intervened, and this question should await the trial of the action, when, if found necessary, the court may direct that they be brought in. Suffice here to say, the plaintiff and the intervening defendant stockholders claim to be entitled to some part and share in the surplus. Whatever right, if any, the stockholder may have to the surplus grows out of his being the owner of shares of the capital stock of the company and must await final distribution, while here the policy holder's right is dependent upon his policy and its continuance and must be determined by the terms of that instrument.

"The internal differences between some of the gentlemen most prominently concerned with the management of the company have had no weight with the court on this motion, and comment upon the allegations touching such disagreements is unnecessary. The court has nothing to do with the reasons or purposes actuating either those who have sought to bring about the contemplated change of charter or of those who now seek to restrain its effectuation. The intentions of all are presumed to be for the good of those interested, and it is for this court only to consider and fearlessly to determine the questions presented."

NO FEDERAL INQUIRY.

Officials Find No Authority for Insurance Investigation.

WASHINGTON, May 26.—President Roosevelt has [illegible] the Federal [illegible] to take [illegible] of the Equitable Life Assurance Society of New York, either through a special commission or through the Bureau of Corporations.

Attorney General Moody has rendered no formal opinion as to the power of the Government to make an investigation, but it is his opinion, expressed informally, that the President has no authority to order an investigation of that kind. It is doubtful, indeed, in the judgment of the law officers of the Government, whether Congress itself constitutionally could empower Government officials to make such an inquiry. The United States Supreme Court is on record in decisions against the conduct of an inquiry into the business of insurance companies, the business of the companies not involving inter-State commerce in any way.

Investigations, officials here say, may be instituted and carried on by the State Governments in the States where the companies do business. These inquiries may be made as rigid as is deemed necessary to develop the facts. Upon State investigations, therefore, Government officials are of opinion that the people must rely for information as to the conduct of the insurance business.

FOR NEW INSURANCE LAW.

Gov. Higgins, It Is Said, Wants Matter Up at Special Session.

There was a report in circulation among politicians of high standing last night that Gov. Higgins would make some recommendations for important insurance legislation at the special session of the Legislature. His recommendations, it was said, would cover the complained-of conditions in the Equitable Life Assurance Society.

The report was received with some favor because of the statement that Gov. Higgins made to the Equitable Company's agents when they called upon him on April 22 to urge legislation which would compel the company to adopt the mutualization plan. On that occasion the Governor said that although he believed in mutualization, and would be glad to do anything within reason to bring it about, he had been advised that it was not within the power of the Legislature to compel the company to mutualize. Moreover, he said that the matter was already in the courts, and he thought it was for the courts to settle it. However, the Governor in concluding his remarks made this statement:

"I shall be interested more largely in the interests of the policy holders of the Equitable Life Assurance Society than in the interests of any other person or party connected with it. And if I come to the conclusion that I can further the interests of those policy holders—if I should come to that conclusion—you can rest assured that no act will be left undone by me that will bring about better conditions for that society."

Ever since Superintendent of Insurance Hendricks undertook the investigation of the Equitable Society's affairs he and the Governor have been in frequent conference.

U. S. LIFE NOT CONNECTED.

No Dealings with the Merchants' Trust, Dr. Munn Writes.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There is no justification for connecting the name of the United States Life Insurance Company with the Merchants' Trust Company. The United States Life Insurance Company has not now and never has had any connection whatever with the Merchants' Trust Company.

It has no account with that company and is not interested in any of the securities held by it.

Three or four years ago the United States Life Insurance Company purchased $100,000 Virginia Passenger and Power Company bonds, which were then believed to be a desirable investment. These bonds were the only security held by the company which did not meet with the approval of the Superintendent in the recent examination made by the Insurance Department, and they were thereupon disposed of without loss to the company.

In concluding his report on the examination of the company the Superintendent says: "Since the examination the management has made such changes and economies, both in its methods of obtaining business and in its Home Office, that the department is satisfied that the company is now in an absolutely sound business condition; that it will be conducted along safe, economical, and conservative lines, and believes that it merits the continued confidence and support of the public."

REWARD FOR TIFFANY GEMS.

Firm Offers $5,000 for Stolen Diamonds and $5,000 for Thief.

In an advertisement this morning offering a reward for three stolen diamonds Tiffany & Co. make public admission for the first time of the theft in their stores on May 3. The advertisement is as follows:

$5,000 reward will be paid for the recovery of the three pear-shaped diamonds weighing 14¾ 1-16, 12¾ 1-32, and 11 3-32 carats, respectively, taken from Tiffany & Co. since April, 1905, and

$5,000 additional reward for the arrest and conviction of the thief. Send all information to Stephen O'Brien, Chief of Detectives, Police Headquarters, New York City.

TIFFANY & CO.,
Union Square, New York.

According to the statement made by the police last Monday this double reward amounts to one-third the value of the stones. A Director of Tiffany & Co. said to a TIMES reporter last night:

"There are absolutely no new developments in the search for the three lost diamonds. The advertisement is issued because we think the prospect of $10,000 may persuade some one who knows something about the case to put us on the track of the jewels.

"I wish to state positively again that no part of the excelsior diamond was lost. A great many false statements have been made about this, and they are being repeated. They have not the slightest foundation in truth. The lost diamonds were the absolute property of Tiffany & Co., and were not merely in their keeping.

"The latest theory is that some one in the Tiffany store must have been working in partnership with a professional crook, who planned the whole affair. But no suspicion attaches to Albert Sormani, the Italian who had the diamonds before the theft. The old man told a TIMES reporter that he put the tray containing the jewels directly in the hands of the assistant superintendent inside the cage and not upon the glass shelf as at first reported.

SAYS ODELL WILL RUN A DEMOCRAT FOR MAYOR

CITY OWNERSHIP A FACTOR

With Municipal League Ticket in Field Chairman Thinks Independent Can Beat Tammany.

It became known last night that at the recent meeting of the Executive Committee of the Greater New York Democracy John C. Sheehan made the statement that he had received a visit from an emissary of State Chairman Odell, who said he was authorized to say to Mr. Sheehan that the Republican organization stood prepared to accept any Democratic candidate for Mayor whom the Greater New York Democracy would name, provided he were deemed a man of character and attainments sufficient to justify his candidacy.

While Mr. Sheehan did not mention the name of Chairman Odell's representative who called on him, it was understood among the members of the committee later that the visitor was County Clerk Hamilton, who has himself been said to entertain an ambition to run for Mayor on a straight Republican ticket. Mr. Hamilton is now in Europe, his trip abroad, it is said, being for the special purpose of consulting Chairman Odell about the local political situation.

No positive action was taken by the Greater New York Democracy on the alleged proposition from Chairman Odell, and it was laid over for future consideration. The Greater New York Democrats may hold a conference with Chairman Odell on his return from Europe on June 28.

Because of the fact that some of the followers of William R. Hearst have become prominent in the Greater New York Democracy of late, it was supposed that the Sheehan organization would line up with the Municipal Ownership League. The possibility of its making an alliance with the Republicans served to confirm in the minds of Tammany politicians who were asked about the matter last night, the suspicion which they have entertained for some time that there was some sort of an understanding between the Hearst forces and State Chairman Odell with respect to the coming campaign. Mr. Hearst is also in Europe.

It is now assured that the Hearst forces will nominate a municipal ownership ticket. Martin W. Littleton, Borough President of Brooklyn, who a few nights ago came out strongly for municipal ownership, is being talked of as a possible candidate for Mayor on the Municipal Ownership League's ticket. Congressman William N. Sulzer is also being spoken of in that connection.

State Chairman Odell is said to figure that, with a strong ticket in the field advocating municipal ownership, he can beat Tammany, with a high-class independent Democrat, who will be actively supported by the Greater New York Democracy.

Despite Mr. Sheehan's statements to the Executive Committee of his organization, however, Chairman Odell's political lieutenants are still talking of a straight Republican ticket, and say that their first choice for the nomination is Louis Stern. They say there is no man in the city who could make greater inroads into the independent following of Mayor McClellan than could Mr. Stern.

TAFT ON CANAL MATERIAL.

Government Bound to Build as Business Man Would Do.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, May 26.—The celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Cincinnati Commercial Club closed to-night with a banquet. Secretary of War Taft made the principal speech, his subject being "Policy and Practice."

"If the Panama Canal were inside the territory of the United States," he said, "of course all material used on the canal could pay duty or be bought in the United States, but as the construction of the canal is a number of days' journey from the tariff wall of the United States it presents exactly the same case as is presented in that of the Philippine Islands.

"Now, if Congress wants to pay more than France was willing to pay, then they are welcome to do so, but in the advance of a rule we feel we must carry out the rule that applies. That law requires that, prices and quality being the same, we must buy American goods. In the absence of a rule we feel bound by our trust to build as cheaply as possible.

"We submitted the question to Congress on this line, asking Congress to lay down a rule. If there is no rule, we must build as a business man would build. Now there is no question of protection or free trade; it is merely our duty under the law as it stands. If the rule or law is changed then we must change."

He spoke of the work of the Commissioners on the canal and praised highly the men who have been put at the head of the work. He then spoke of the relation of the Government to the railroads.

"I cannot but think," he said, "that the discussion which is now going on has had a much wider scope than is necessary. The question is the passage of certain legislation and the discussion is properly narrowed by consideration of what that legislation is."

He explained the present statute on the Inter-State Commerce Commission calling attention to its references to "unreasonable rates" and the position of the commission on the matter. He insisted that the measure proposed was a moderate measure, and that it was unfair to denounce it as severely as had been done. He believed the changes proposed by the Esch-Townsend bill would result in good. He held that it would greatly relieve the courts to provide a court to consider railroad rates.

Physician Finds It Unexplained in Many Persons.

QUEER RESULTS OF INQUIRY

Sight of Cats Leads to Lockjaw, Hysterics, Temporary Blindness, and Dreams.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 26.—At a recent gathering of physicians in Washington Dr. S. Weir Mitchell delivered an address on "The Fear of Cats." The address was not made public at the time, but was given out to-night. Dr. Mitchell said in part:

"Three years ago I was consulted in the case of an hysterical young woman in whom the fear of cats had become an obsession. She declared she could always detect the presence of an unseen and unheard cat. I saw her three times, and on each occasion she said there was a cat in the room. It was true of her first visit, although she could not have seen it. It was untrue of her two later visits, but each time she exhibited the same fear and the usual mild hysterical manifestations.

"A second case was, I felt sure, an exhibition of real capacity to know when the unseen and unheard cat was present. It came to my knowledge later.

"In order to collect material for study I asked through American Medicine answers to the following:

"A.—Have you any antipathy to cats? Are you subject to unusual feelings or symptoms in the presence of a cat? What are these? Does the presence of a tiger in a menagerie affect you as do cats? Can you account for your cat fear by anything obvious, as, for example, any incident of childhood? At what age did you first discover your peculiarity as to cats?

"B.—Are you surely aware of a cat when it is not in sight or known to be near? If yes, give the evidence, your own and that of others, as to the fact. What feelings or symptoms make you sure of

SAYS GOULD PLANNED TO GET SOUTHERN ROAD

Fisher Tells His Side of Merchants' Trust Loan Matter.

NOT TO AID MUNN, HE SAYS

Denies That Goulds Were Forced to Take Up Loan—Night Trip for Receiver.

George E. Fisher yesterday told his side of his connection with Frank Jay Gould and the Virginia Passenger and Power Company, which negotiated a loan in 1902 of $1,400,000 with the collapsed Merchants' Trust Company, and thus brought on the first trouble in which that company found itself involved.

Mr. Fisher denied in toto the allegations made by the attorneys for the trust company and the Goulds to the effect that he forced the loan on the trust company, or was instrumental in any way in forcing Frank Gould and his sister, Miss Helen Gould, to take up the loan to save Dr. Munn and the trust company. He asserted that Frank Gould deliberately sought to get control of the Virginia company at his own figures, and was successful. Fisher said that the charges against him are part of an effort to minimize the force of the suit now pending in the Virginia courts and brought by him and other minority stock and bond holders to compel the Goulds to fulfill a contract made with the Virginia corporation.

"Everything that I shall say on this subject," said Mr. Fisher, "is susceptible of proof, and, what is more, I have the proofs right here in my safe. In the first place, I am not a promoter, and I spent thirteen years in bringing to its present high state of efficiency the Richmond corporation. I invested a large amount of money in it, and believe to-day that it is one of the finest properties in the country.

"I have not been sued in Richmond by the Goulds. On the contrary, I and other minority stockholders and bondholders are the plaintiffs to enforce a contract made by Gould to pay more than $1,000,000 for the Virginia properties. The Goulds set up as an answer that the returns of the road were padded and that after he got control the receipts fell off about $50,000 a month. Now, here are the receiver's reports. There can be no padding of them. I told the Goulds that the receipts would be about $1,300,000 to $1,400,000 a year. The receiver's reports of earnings show for the poorest six months of the year $714,000. That answers the question as to whether I doctored the receipts.

"Young Gould first became interested in the Virginia properties in 1900, when he underwrote $100,000 of the securities, $80,000 in bonds, $20,000 in preferred stock, and $100,000 of common stock as a bonus. I sold those bonds for him later at 105.

GOULD'S YACHT TRIP.

"In the Summer of 1902 Gould took Langdon, then President of the Merchants' Trust Company, with him on his yacht to Richmond, and it was while there, and after a full investigation of the company's affairs, that he was seized with the desire to possess the property. It was later that the loan was made with the trust company, which had control of the company from that time. Up to that there had been no question as to the value of the Virginia company's securities. Suddenly the banking department ordered the loans taken up. How that came about is a matter for conjucture, but at all events it gave Frank Gould an opportunity to get the control held by the trust company.

"It was at this stage, and all this is susceptible of legal proof on file, when the trust company was in danger of being closed, that Frank Gould and his sister entered into an agreement to take the loan out of the Merchants' Trust Company and to take up some other loans of the Virginia company, but they insisted as a part of the agreement that all such collateral must be margined down to 50 instead of at 90, the figure at which it stood at the trust company and which had always been considered entirely satisfactory. As a result the Goulds got $3,000,000 of the bonds of the company, then selling at par, at 48.

"An interesting feature of the programme was the manner in which this loan was paid. A check of the Bowling Green Trust Company, which is controlled by the Goulds, and of which Edwin Gould is President, was sent to the Merchants' Trust Company. It was for $1,400,000. As soon as it was received Secretary Grant indorsed on the back of it 'for deposit to the credit of the Merchants' Trust Company,' and sent it back to the Bowling Green. While the Merchants' had the credit, the whole transaction was effected without a cent of Gould money being shown.

OFFER FROM GOULD.

"The Virginia company then found itself in the position of not being able to pay the interest on its underlying bonds, which was due on Jan. 1, and which amounted to $250,000. In this dilemma an offer came from Gould through his counsel, Charles A. Gardner, and his confidential secretary, Guy Phillips, that he would advance the company $250,000 in cash for $1,000,000 of its bonds. It was forced to accept this offer, and so Gould got another million of the bonds at 25.

"It has been stated that the act of the Goulds was one of philanthropy to help out Dr. Munn and the trust company. The conditions which I have stated do not look like anything of the kind, but, as a further condition for affording the relief to the Merchants' Company, the Goulds insisted that at least 51 per cent. of the stock of the Virginia company be turned over to them. This had previously been increased from $3,000,000 to $15,000,000. There was no consideration for this transfer, but under the circumstances there was nothing to do but accede.

"They also insisted as a condition of taking up the loan that the Atlantic Development Company, capitalized at $1,000,000, which was the financing company of the Virginia corporation in New York, be transferred to them absolutely. This company purchased $6,500,000 of the bonds at 90, agreeing to take and pay for at least one-half in one year from Oct. 14, 1902, and the other half within two years. As a matter of fact, the Atlantic Development Company took and paid for nearly $3,000,000 of these bonds at 90 before Dec. 23, 1902, when the Goulds took up the Merchants' Trust loan.

GOT $3,000,000 IN BONDS.

"It was thus that the Goulds got possession of a majority of the stock of the Virginia corporation, acquired its bonds at 25 and 48, controlled the Atlantic Development Company, from which they ousted all the officers and put in their own, and got an extra $3,000,000 of the bonds without any consideration whatever. This has never been accounted for.

"Being now in complete control, and having placed their Directors and officers in charge, the Goulds then caused corporate action to be taken to annul the agreement that had been made whereby the Atlantic Company agreed to purchase the $6,500,000 of bonds at 90.

"The next move was to default in the payment of the interest on some underlying bonds, and steps were taken at the same time to convey the most valuable property under the Virginia mortgage to another company owned absolutely by Frank Gould and known as the Charlotte and Prince Edward Electric and Improvement Company, and they sought to have the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, trustee under the mortgage to release the property from the lien of the mortgage covering it, thereby depleting and reducing the security of the Virginia bond.

"It was then that Virginia suits were brought to prevent this, and an injunction was issued, which is now in force, restraining such action. For eight days the trial of the suit for a receivership to prevent this was fought in the Virginia State Court. On the night of July 13, 1904, the counsel for the Goulds hired a special train of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and a special tug across Hampton Roads to Norfolk, and there roused the Judge of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, and at 3 o'clock in the morning filed a bill of complaint in an action brought by the Bowling Green Trust Company for the foreclosure of the Virginia mortgage and the appointment of a receiver. He was immediately appointed and returned to Richmond, taking control at 9 o'clock the next morning, while the argument was still progressing in the State Court. One of the receivers was William Northrup, Frank Gould's cousin.

"Frank Gould was a Director of the Merchants' Trust from Aug. 20, 1902, to Oct. 28, 1902; was re-elected a member of the Executive Committee in December, 1902, and his confidential secretary, Guy Phillips, was elected a Director and member of the Executive Committee on Oct. 28, 1902."

The formal motion to make the receivership for the Merchants' Trust Company permanent will be made in Hudson on June 3. The papers have been issued by Judge Cochrane. It was also said yesterday that Dr. Munn was making great efforts to have matters adjusted before that time, and that he had not given up hope of success.

George G. Battle, of counsel for Frank Gould, said last night:

"The Merchants' Trust Company had invested in the Virginia company before Mr. Gould had anything to do with it."

It was also said on behalf of Mr. Gould, but not by Mr. Battle, that in 1902, when Mr. Gould became a Director of the Merchants' Trust, the Virginia company owed $1,400,000 to the Merchants' Trust. Mr. Gould, it was added, was interested in the latter, as he had $1,000,000 deposited with it and held half or nearly half the stock.

The trust company, it was asserted, was in a very bad condition, and in order to save the situation Mr. Gould invested $2,200,000 in the Virginia properties and took them out of the trust company. He continued, it was asserted, as a Director of the trust company, and in 1903 a syndicate was almost formed to take over the trust company from its then owners and to set it upon an entirely new basis.

In January, 1904, said Mr. Gould's friend, Mr. Gould was approached in the ordinary course of business by Mr. Charles Langdon with a proposal for the purchase of his interest in the trust company. He accepted it, receiving the market price for his stock. He did not inquire, this man said, who the real purchaser was, and did not know until afterward that Mr. Langdon had bought the stock for himself.

ARMITAGE MATHEWS INDICTED FOR ROBBERY

Rothschild, Ferguson and Wooten Also Held for Weisell Steal.

GOT $71,500, IT IS CHARGED

Grand Jury Finds That They Named the Administrator and Borrowed on Estate's Assets.

The Grand Jury yesterday returned indictments for conspiracy and grand larceny on four different counts against Armitage Mathews, Secretary of the Republican County Committee, ex-Alderman from the Twenty-first District, and one of the lieutenants of Col. Abraham Gruber; Samuel I. Ferguson, a lawyer, with offices at 130 Nassau Street; John W. Wooten, also a lawyer, and former counsel for the defunct Federal Bank, and David Rothschild, who was President of the Federal Bank and other notorious financial concerns, and now serving a sentence at Sing Sing.

The exact offense of which the four defendants are accused is robbing the estate of William Weisell of $91,000. It is charged that stocks and railroad bonds with a par value amounting to that sum were hypothecated by David Rothschild as temporary administrator of the estate, and the proceeds, aggregating $71,500, divided betwech him and the other three men.

Mathews, Wooten, and Ferguson were arraigned yesterday afternoon before Judge Cowing in the General Sessions Court, and held in $5,000 bail each. Mathews was temporarily represented by Lawyer Lewis, a personal friend, but his counsel will be the firm of Black, Olcott, Gruber & Bonynge. Mr. Gilbert, a partner of Attorney-General Mayer, appeared for Wooten, who had previously been indicted on a separate charge of grand larceny, while Ferguson was represented by Benjamin A. Reass. For Mathews, Aqueduct Commissioner John P. Windolph, who is also the Republican leader of the Eleventh Assembly District, gave bond. The others were also released on bond.

CHARGES IN THE INDICTMENT.

William Weisell died in April, 1903, leaving an estate valued at about $300,000. His will was filed three weeks later, and in May, that year, six heirs began a contest. Ferguson represented them. Of what happened afterward the indictments returned yesterday set forth in substance that Rothschild, Ferguson, Wooten, and Mathews, on June 13, conspired to get the Weisell assets, and to make unlawful use of them by causing Rothschild to be appointed the temporary administrator "upon a corrupt and wicked understanding."

On June 25 the defendants agreed that Rothschild should pay to Ferguson all the fees and emoluments that he, Rothschild, should receive as administrator, and that Ferguson should pay to Wooten one-quarter of such fees; that Rothschild, upon procuring possession of the assets, should borrow large sums of money and pledge the assets for the payment; that he should pay to Ferguson and Wooten for their individual profit three-one-hundredths of all such sums borrowed by him; that Rothschild should employ Wooten to act as the counsel for him as administrator, and that Wooten would pay to Ferguson one-quarter of all amounts received by him for professional services as counsel to the administrator.

On June 30 Surrogate Fitzgerald issued an order appointing Rothschild temporary administrator and requiring him to file a bond for $400,000. Of how the bond was procured and Mathews brought into the alleged conspiracy the indictments say that on July 1, 1903, the defendants, Mathews being the Assistant Secretary of the Bankers' Surety Company of Cleveland, Ohio, and attorney for the company, agreed that Mathews would induce the company to become surety on the bond to be given by Rothschild; that he would induce the company to allow Rothschild the sole custody and control of all the property he should receive as administrator, and that Rothschild should pay to Mathews for his individual profit three-one-hundredths of all the moneys that he should borrow upon the securities of the estate.

The company acted in accordance with the advice of Mathews, and the bond was filed and accepted in July, so that on July 9 Rothschild was enabled to take possession of the assets of the estate. The indictments relate in detail how Rothschild used stocks and railroad bonds belonging to the estate, and having a total par value of $91,000, to obtain loans as follows: On Aug. 21, $24,000, from the Mercantile Trust Company of New York; on Oct. 12, $32,500, from the Title Guarantee and Trust Company of New York, and on Dec. 20, 1903, $15,000, from the Mercantile Trust Company again. The indictments also relate how from July 2, 1903, to March 15, 1904, Rothschild paid in sums varying from $50 to $1,250 to his three confederates the following total amounts: Ferguson, $4,975; Wooten, $1,000, and Mathews, $3,750. Forming a part of the indictments are copies of a letter alleged to have been authorized by Mathews, written by Wooten, and delivered to Rothschild in consideration for $750 "corruptly and fraudulently paid to the said Mathews." Part of the letter is as follows:

In consideration of the sum of $750 paid to Mathews to-day, he has agreed as follows:

First—To withdraw the motion for substitution of surety by the temporary administrator of the Weisell estate, and to notify the company to that effect, also to inform the company that the securities are intact, and that joint control would be given with him as representing and acting for the surety company.

Second—That he would exercise only a tentative joint control, that is, he should have a key to the safe-deposit box in which the securities are deposited, the key to be kept in his own private safe deposit box to which he alone has access under an agreement that he should not have the right to use the key and open the box except at such times as may be agreed to and convenient for the temporary administrator; in other words, that Mathews shall not have access to the box containing the securities, except by consent of and in the presence of the temporary administrator.

BEFORE SEVERAL GRAND JURIES.

The investigation resulting in these indictments has been going on several months, successive Grand Juries taking up the matter and examining a large number of witnesses. The first inkling of the investigation reached the public in February, this year, when it was learned through a remark made by Col. Gruber at the dinner given by the Hungarian Republican Club, District Attorney Jerome being one of the guests, that the firm of Black, Olcott, Gruber & Boynge had notified Mr. Jerome that they represented Mr. Mathews if any kind of proceedings should be or have been instituted against him. In April Rothschild and another State's prisoner, an ex-lawyer named Martin Conlon, were brought here from Sing Sing and examined by Assistant District Attorney Kresel. It was then said that Rothschild had turned State's evidence and had told the District Attorney all about his transactions with Mathews, Ferguson, and Wooten.

At the same time it was learned that certain confessions written by Rothschild in prison and left to Conlon for safe-keeping, had been intercepted by the prison authorities and by them forwarded to ex-Gov. Black at Troy.

POOH BAH OF BAYONNE.

Wants $500 Reward for Catching a Firebug.

Whether or not "Judge" James J. Boylan, Justice of the Peace, real estate and fire insurance broker, Commissioner of deeds, auctioneer and steamship agent, ever gets the $500 he says is due him from the City of Bayonne, he is giving the Finance Committee, the Common Council, the City Attorney, the police, and the public of that municipality plenty to talk about.

In one of the several epidemics of incendiary fires from which Bayonne has suffered in recent years—long before the unassisted arson act of Volunteer McInerney of the Americus Engine Company, which resulted in his arrest and imprisonment—the City Council offered a $500 reward for any person who would bring about the arrest and conviction of a firebug. There were no restrictions as to the offer—it was wide open and took in any incendiary, however lowly.

In his capacity of real estate agent Mr. Boylan then had listed and later rented a frame building on Avenue A. In his capacity as agent for fire insurance he wrote a policy on the household goods of one of the tenants. As Justice of the Peace he heard, when the house burned down, that there was "something crooked" about the blaze. As adjuster of the loss sustained he investigated, and to such good effect that a witness was found who, before him as Notary Public, made affidavit that the fire was of suspicious origin.

Having heard the story of the witness Mr. Boylan, as private citizen, was imbued with a desire for the $500 reward. He called in the police and two arrests were made. Mr. Boylan, as witness, helped pile up the evidence against them. One of the accused was convicted and sentenced to eighteen months. The other jumped his bail.

Next in the line of Mr. Boylan's activities came the assumption of a collector's role, and here for the first time he experienced a check. That he is not easily discouraged was shown when, for the third time since he presented his bill, he last night bearded the Finance Committee of the Bayonne Council in its lair, and with blood in his eye and lawyer by his side fought for the justice of his claim.

It was a great occasion in Bayonne. The Council Chamber was crowded when Mr. Boylan strode into the room.

There was a long wait, during which Mr. Boylan glared at a rival claimant, Abraham Schumann. It was rumored that Chairman John T. Cronin had fled to Staten Island. The rumor was base and baseless, too. At 9 o'clock he arrived. With him came Bayonne's City Attorney and the other committeemen, Joseph McCurnin and William Cassidy.

Before opening the proceedings Mr. Cronin said he had a statement to make and some letters to read.

"There has been so much talk about this case," he declared, "and so many charges and counter-charges that I wish to put this committee's attitude clearly before the public. All that we want to do is to get at the facts."

He read a communication from Mr. Goldenberg, who, signing himself attorney for Schumann, wrote that "there was a little black man in the woodpile," and that before the hearing was over the City of Bayonne would be saved a lot of money. Mr. Boylan sniffed disdainfully.

The Chairman read another letter, this time from Mr. Boylan, in which secret influences were hinted at and the committee was plainly informed that the writer wanted his just dues or he would know the reason why.

It developed that Goldenberg, the lawyer, was not present. Another lawyer, who had represented Schumann at a preceding hearing, was, but he said something about money, and his erstwhile employer repudiated him.

"I will represent myself," said Schumann, who is interested in a livery and sales stable, and asserts that he gave Mr. Boylan the information on which the police acted in arresting the men held responsible for the fire on Avenue A.

A stenographer was sworn well and truthfully to transcribe the proceedings, and the hearing started. Mr. Boylan took the stand, but before he began his story Schumann asked the City Attorney if a Justice of the Peace could accept a reward under the Jersey law.

"The cop that nabbed the fireman not long ago can't take a reward," Schumann argued. "And if a cop is barred why shouldn't a Justice be?"

Bayonne's legal adviser declined to answer on the ground that a City Attorney's ruling was without finality.

Mr. Boylan then told his story. It was a long story, with as many ramifications as Philadelphia politics. About every third minute Schumann jumped up, and every time he did it required the united energies of the committee and the City Attorney to calm him.

It was well along toward midnight before Mr. Boylan concluded, and then he was taken in hand by the City Attorney.

No decision had been reached when an adjournment was at last taken.

NOT 21, HE TELLS CREDITORS.

Alleged Bankrupt Who Got $18,000 for Store Under Age, He Says.

Leopold Marx, who did business as the Bronx Department Store at 2,735 Third Avenue, against whom a petition in bankruptcy was filed on May 16 by creditors, has moved to dismiss the petition and vacate the order appointing Lindsay Russell receiver by pleading what his creditors call the baby act. He declares that he was not twenty-one years old until May 20, four days after the petition was filed, and that he was born in this city on May 20, 1884.

It was disclosed yesterday in the examination of Justus Frankel by Leo Oppenheimer, attorney for Receiver Russell, that five days before Marx became of age, and the day before the petition was filed, Marx sold the entire stock to Mr. Frankel for $18,000, of which $10,000 was paid in cash and $8,000 in notes. Mr. Frankel borrowed the $10,000 in cash from the State Bank on his own notes. This was his first operation with the bank.

Mr. Oppenheimer said yesterday that this was the first time the question of infancy had come up in the bankruptcy court here. It would be argued, he said, next Monday, in the United States District Court. Lesser Brothers, who represent the largest merchandise creditors, have also intervened in the case. Mr. Marx has had the business since Aug. 1, 1904.

The total bill was $25,996, on which he paid a part, and allowances were made, leaving a balance of $11,043, which, with interest and costs, make up the amount of the judgment. He was served with the summons on May 5 last at 173 Madison Avenue.

RIOTS START AFRESH IN CHICAGO STRIKE

BUILDING TRADES WON'T HELP

Decide Not to Join Strike—Guards Charge Crowds with Revolvers and Make Many Arrests.

CHICAGO, May 26.—There was general strike rioting to-day and to-night throughout the lumber yards district. Lumber wagons returning from making deliveries to-night were attacked by crowds at every available opportunity. Large numbers of men, armed with clubs, slungshots, and bricks, accompanied by jeering women and children, filled the sidewalks along Centre Avenue, West Thirty-fifth Street, Loomis Street, and Archer Avenue, waiting for wagons, which were believed to be unguarded.

At Archer and Loomis Streets trucks appeared with one policeman on each. The drivers were immediately bombarded with bricks and stones, and several air rifles were brought into play. A bullet from one of these wounded Policeman James Fitzpatrick in the right hand. The policemen drew revolvers and fired over the heads of the rioters, holding them at bay until the drivers reached the yards.

A patrol wagon and a detail of policemen were sent to protect other lumber wagons which were on the way home. Stones were hurled at the patrol wagon, and the policemen were forced several times to jump from the wagon and charge the mobs before the streets could be sufficiently cleared to enable them to reach the lumber wagons.

A crowd of union pickets had been stationed in a saloon in West Thirty-fifth Street to block the passage of the lumber trucks. The police dashed into this saloon, used their clubs freely, and chased the pickets down the street. The return of wagons to the lumber yards was marked by repeated attempts to block the streets and the police made numerous charges into the mobs.

About 1 o'clock to-day fierce rioting broke out at West Madison and Canal Streets. An American Express Company wagon was stopped by strikers, and the mob seized the wheels of the wagon in an attempt to overturn it. A riot call brought three patrol wagons loaded with officers. The police charged the crowd and arrested everybody they could lay hands on. They loaded the three patrol wagons full of men, and made three trips to the station house, carrying prisoners each time, but every time they returned the jeering crowd was larger. Forty-two arrests were made.

Mayor Dunne to-day for the first time since the strike began declared that he knew of no contemplated plans for peace. The Mayor talked as though he had abandoned all hope of a settlement. Alderman Dever, Chairman of the City Council Peace Committee, said to-night that he had ceased work, as the committee could see no way of adjusting the differences between the teamsters and the employers. The Mayor has not yet decided to ask for troops.

President Shea of the Teamsters' Union is in ill-health. He was late in reaching court to-day, and when he did arrive he looked tired and worried. He asked the master in chancery to be excused from going on the witness stand in the injunction case, but he was required to answer questions for an hour.

Attorney Levy Mayer, for the employers, in his examination attempted to identify certain North Cambridge (Mass.) men in connection with a murder in which Shea, when a young man, was alleged to have been involved. Shea was born in North Cambridge.

In questioning witnesses Mr. Mayer often alluded to Mrs. Shea and her daughter. Shea sprang from the witness stand and told Attorney Mayer that he was willing to answer all questions concerning his family, but that Mr. Mayer had better not cast any slurs upon them.

It is believed that Shea's illness will cause him to retire from the leadership of the strike.

At a meeting of the Associated Building Trades to-night, at which twenty-nine trades affiliated with the building industries were represented, it was decided that no action would be taken which might tend to drag the building trades into the teamsters' strike.

FIVE YACHTS SIGHTED BY A SINGLE LINER

ATLANTIC PROBABLY FIRST

If Unidentified Boat Seen by Haversham Grange Was Hildegarde, Philadelphian Is Second.

The Hamburg, Endymion, and Ailsa were picked up by three passing steamers and reported by wireless yesterday. These are all of the missing yachts, except the Hildegarde, that had not been recently reported, of the Kaiser's Cup ocean race contestants. Moreover, the time of their sighting definitely fixes the relative positions of the leaders when five and a half days out, or about midnight on Monday last. The distance traversed by most of the boats at the time ranged from 968 to 1,107 knots, with the Hamburg leading that part of the fleet and the Valhalla bringing up the rear. The Atlantic, according to every reasonable calculation, should have been over 200 knots ahead of the Hamburg, and if the unidentified two-master reported by the British steamer, Haversham Grange, is the Hildegarde, as believed, she would be second in the race, probably thirty or more knots in front of the German.

The positions of the little fleet which the Hamburg was leading were reported by the east-bound Minnehaha yesterday and on Thursday. She had sighted the Fleur de Lys and Valhalla, and an unknown first thought to be the Atlantic and later discovered to be probably the Endymion. Information from other sources seems to bear out this conclusion. Behind the Hamburg the Minnehaha passed in order the Ailsa, the Fleur de Lys, the supposed Endymion, and the Valhalla. It took the Minnehaha eight hours to pass the five. In that time she covered 139 knots according to her report. In this distance were the five yachts. The Valhalla, proceeding at nearly eight knots an hour at the time, must have gone at least sixty knots in the same time, so that the five were separated less than eighty knots.

The Lucania reports the Sunbeam on the afternoon of May 22 at longitude 54 degrees 47 minutes west, latitude 40 degrees 16 minutes north. This is 886 knots out in 123 hours, an average of 7.2 knots an hour. This would place her just behind the position where the Minnehaha sighted the Valhalla at midnight, as in the nine hours she would doubtless make 65 knots, and total over 950. She would be sixteen miles north of the ship-rigged vessel, and about as much to the west.

Less than an hour later she passed a two-masted schooner believed to be the Thistle, sixteen knots further east. This would place the Thistle almost beside the Valhalla at midnight, and slightly north of her, and ahead of Sunbeam about ten miles.

This leaves only Utowana and Apache, and they are hopelessly in the rear.

The five positions reported by the Minnehaha are most interesting. They read:

Hours Elapsed.	Yachts.	Location. Lon.	Lat.	Knots Out.	Average Knots.
138	Hamburg	50.00	40.00	1,107	8.0
135	Ailsa	51.00	40.00	1,061	7.9
132	Fleur de Lys	52.12	40.00	1,005	7.6
132	Endymion	52.12	40.00	1,003	7.6
130	Valhalla	53.00	40.00	968	7.4

From the Celtic comes information of the Hamburg and Endymion over a day later. She was westward bound and transmitted her message to the faster Campania, which reported it through the Siasconsett Marconi station on her way in. The Celtic first met the Hamburg on Wednesday at 1:45 o'clock in the afternoon, Greenwich time. Five hours later the Celtic passed the Endymion. She was 1,332 knots out and allowing 20 knots for the Hamburg's further progress, 55 knots behind the German.

POLICEMAN REPORTED ILL.

"Shoofly" Roundsman Found Him at Work Shingling His House.

An anonymous letter received by Commissioner McAdoo yesterday led to the catching of a policeman shingling the roof of his house, while according to the police records he was supposed to be ill.

The letter said that a certain policeman—the Commissioner refused to give his name—was not sick, as he had reported at his station house, but was engaged each day shingling his house. A "shoofly" roundsman was sent to the house and found the policeman at work, as the author of the letter said. Charges will be brought against him.

NORFOLK & SOUTHERN SOLD.

Goes for Cash and Buyer's Name Is Withheld.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, May 26.—The controlling interest in the Norfolk and Southern Railroad, which was acquired last year by Henry Sproul & Co. and James C. Chaplin of this city, has been sold for a cash consideration. The report was confirmed at the office of Henry Sproul & Co. to-day. The purchaser is not known, as the transaction was a cash one, and conducted through a New York attorney. A special dispatch from Norfolk says that the sale was due to trouble between Sproul & Co. and Chaplin. This is denied by both Pittsburg men.

Gets a Year for Stealing Hotel Clock.

George R. Rogers, the man who stole the Fifth Avenue Hotel clock, was sentenced yesterday by Judge Cowing, in General Sessions, to a year in the penitentiary. The clock weighed 50 pounds, and the judge expressed astonishment that the prisoner had been able to carry it away.

BURDEN CONTEST ENDED.

Judgment Filed Indicates Close of Twenty-five Years' Litigation.

TROY, N. Y., May 26.—Judgment filed in the County Clerk's office to-day indicates the close of litigation between I. Townsend Burden and James A. Burden, both of whom are well known here and in New York City, and who, together with their sons, own all but two shares of the stock of the Burden Iron Works. Lawsuits brought by I. Townsend Burden against his brother and the other Trustees of the company engaged the attention of the courts for twenty-five years, and have been decided in favor of James A. Burden.

The case now ended involved James A. Burden's claims as an inventor of improvements in horseshoe machines and the payment to him of a royalty for the use of his patented devices and the trial court held in his favor. A suit in the Federal Court relative to the same matter was recently withdrawn by I. Townsend Burden. The differences have been settled to the mutual satisfaction of all the parties.

PERE MARQUETTE PROTEST.

Officials Argue Canadian Alien Law Was Not Violated.

Special to The New York Times.

OTTAWA, Ontario, May 26.—The officials of the Père Marquette Railway take the ground that the men belonging to their line whose deportation was ordered by the Government were not brought in under contract to replace Canadians, but simply were transferred from one section of the line to another. Such being the case, they argue that there has been no violation of the Canadian Alien Labor act, as interpreted in the United States.

THREE ARRESTED IN STORE.

Two Women and Little Girl Taken Into Custody.

The detective work of J. A. Lehman and Miss Nan Young, detectives in a Sixth Avenue department store, deprived of liberty yesterday a young woman who was charged with attempting to steal a dollar pocketbook; her sister, who is charged with being an accessory, and a four-year-old daughter of one of the women, who was charged with nothing.

Minnie Carroll, thirty-eight years old, of 60 Summit Street, Yonkers, and her sister, Mrs. Nora O'Hare, twenty-four years old, of 410 East Seventy-sixth Street, were in the store shopping late yesterday afternoon. Mrs. O'Hare had her little daughter, Edna, with her. Miss Carroll was arrested charged with attempting to steal a pocketbook. Between sobs at the station house she said that she was trying to exchange one she had bought for another.

The two women had several packages which they said they had bought at other stores. These were taken away by the department store sleuths.

The two women were locked up in the West Thirtieth Street Station. The little girl was taken from her mother and sent to the rooms of the Children's Society. Mrs. O'Hare said she had left two other children locked up in her home, and that they would not be liberated until late at night, when her brother returned from work. Neither of the women had been bailed out up to a late hour last night.

GRAPE-NUTS.

DEMAND FACTS

About What You Eat.

When it comes to food, demand to know the facts about what goes into your stomach.

Not only that it is pure, but that you are not deceived in the description of its contents and condition. Some flaked breakfast foods that have thus far failed are now being advertised in close imitation of the Grape-Nuts advertising, thinking in that way to finally make a success of the failure.

But false statements of the merits of human food will never on earth build up a business. These flaked foods are not pre-digested. They are not fully cooked and the starch in them is starch still and has not been turned to sugar, as claimed.

Chemical analysis tells the truth, and the analyses of the famous chemists of the world show Grape-Nuts the only prepared breakfast food in which the starch part of the wheat and barley has been transformed into sugar, and therefore ready for immediate digestion. Why is this true? All the thin rolled flake foods are made by soaking the grains of wheat or oats in water, then rolling, drying and packing. These operations do not cook or pre-digest the starch.

Contrasted with this pretense, observe the care, method and skill in making Grape-Nuts.

The barley is soaked about one hundred hours, then it is slowly warmed for some days and sprouted, the diastase being developed and part of the starch turned to sugar, (and later on all of it,) then the grains are baked and the sprouts stripped off. Then comes grinding, sifting and mixing with the creamy colored flour made from white and macaroni wheat. This mixture must be skillfully made in right proportions. This blended flour contains just the ingredients demanded by nature to rebuild the soft gray substance in the nerve centres and brain, but how to make the food easy to digest, that was the question.

It certainly would not do to mix in drugs, for there is a certain failure sure to come to the person depending on drugs to digest food. They may do for a temporary expedient, but pure food and digestible food is the only final resort and safe way. So to change the remaining starch part and prepare the other elements in this blended flour it is made up into massive loaves like bread, the inside being dark cream color and quite sticky to the touch. These loaves are sliced and again go through long cooking at certain temperatures. Then the rock-hard slices are each one carefully inspected and ground ready for packing and use, having gone through 10 or 12 hours in the different operations.

When finished each little granule will show a sparkling substance on its surface. A magnifying glass will bring it out clearer and develop little pieces of pure dextrose sugar, not put on "or poured over," (as the head of a large Sanitarium once stated in his paper, thus exposing his appalling ignorance of food processes,) but this sugar exudes from the interior of each as the starch is slowly turned to sugar in the process of manufacture. This kind of sugar is exactly like what is found in the human intestines, provided the starch of the grains, potatoes, bread, rice, cake, etc., etc., has been perfectly digested. But many are weak in that form of digestion and yet need the starches, so Grape-Nuts supplies them pre-digested, and ready to go quickly into the blood.

Visitors are shown freely through the works and can follow the steps of making Grape-Nuts from the grain to the finished product. The proportions of different kinds of flour, and the temperatures are not disclosed, and it seems impossible for others to steal these secrets of the makers. But purity, cleanliness and skill are shown in every corner of the immense pure food factories. People who care for results from choicely selected food, those who want the food to rebuild the soft gray substance in brain and nerves that give the go, the vigor, the life, will understand why the imitators who try to copy the announcements about Grape-Nuts have failed in the past.

Property of Alexander Russell Comes Unexpectedly to Light.

BORN IN CARNEGIE'S TOWN

St. Louis Telegram Caused Brooklyn Public Administrator to Make Search, with Surprising Result.

It developed yesterday that there died in Brooklyn last October, alone and unnoticed, a man who left behind a million dollars or more worth of property in this country and in Scotland. The man was Alexander Russell, an old Scotchman, born in Dunfermline, the town from which came Andrew Carnegie. While Mr. Russell lived comfortably, he lived alone, and no one knew that he was even well-to-do.

The bid man died suddenly, and the Coroner took possession of such of his effects as were found in his home. A few days afterward the Public Administrator of St. Louis communicated with Henry Bristow, Public Administrator of Brooklyn, saying that he had taken possession of the estate of Alexander Russell in St. Louis, consisting of real estate and securities worth $200,000.

Administrator Bristow and Charles H. Kelby, his counsel, then began a search of safe deposit vaults and banks in lower Manhattan, and found in the vaults of the Colonial Trust Company securities worth $340,000. He also found a bank book showing that Mr. Russell had on deposit in the Chemical Bank the sum of $84,000.

Mr. Kelby then sought Mr. Russell's relatives, and a few days ago David Deas Blair of Dunfermline appeared in Brooklyn with a will, executed by Mr. Russell in Scotland, by the terms of which his sister Agnes Jeanette Russell, was made the chief legatee. It was found that there was fully $500,000 worth of property in the estate in Scotland.

Mr. Russell left small legacies to two Brooklyn women, widows of former partners, and divided $85,000 among several institutions. David D. Blair is the executor named in the will. Mr. Blair is also a Trustee of one of Andrew Carnegie's benefactions.

Mr. Russell emigrated from Scotland to Canada when quite a young man. He afterward came to New York, and became a member of the firm of D. Crawford & Co., wholesale dry goods merchants of New York and St. Louis. He retired some years ago, and shortly afterward the firm was dissolved.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, May 26.—Alex Russell, who died in New York supposedly poor, was a member of the firm of D. Crawford & Co., which went out of business several years ago. He was a bachelor, and while he lived very quietly, was known here to have large interests. He is said to have sold his share in the firm for $165,000. Russell continued to live in St. Louis some years after this, but eventually went to New York.

SMOKE CAUSED HOTEL SCARE.

Patrons of Manhattan Square Alarmed by Burning Waste.

The Manhattan Square Hotel on West Seventy-seventh Street had a fire scare yesterday afternoon. About 5:35 o'clock a man in the street saw clouds of smoke hovering about the roof. The wind blew briskly and forced the smoke down before the front of the hotel. The man turned in a fire alarm and then hurried into the office of the hotel.

Assistant Manager William Gavin quickly decided that the smoke was from a chimney merely, and he ran back into the hotel to quiet the patrons. Meanwhile, however, fire engines were arriving and a crowd collected in the street. The patrons began rushing to the elevators and some of them descended as far as the lobby before they were reassured.

Investigation into the cause of the smoke showed that some one had thrown cotton waste into a furnace.

MARTIAL LAW IN WARSAW.

Declared After Further Demolition of "Red Light" Quarters.

WARSAW, May 26.—This city is now under martial law, which was proclaimed late to-night.

In the morning the demolition of disorderly houses by the Jewish Socialist organization called the Bund continued unchecked throughout the city. The Jews and Christians joined forces and worked together to make a clean sweep. They not only wrecked disorderly houses, but also private apartments that were suspected.

Cossacks and gendarmes looked on as amused spectators, and the police were not to be seen. In the afternoon, however, after nearly forty-eight hours of mob law, the authorities interfered, patrols of infantry and Cossacks speedily dispersing the rioters.

In two instances the troops fired on crowds, wounding three persons. Fifty arrests were made, after which order was restored.

Nineteen persons were injured in to-day's disturbances, and in the hospitals there were three deaths of persons who received injuries in the rioting of Wednesday night.

Six thousand troops came to Warsaw to-day from their Summer encampment.

STARVATION IN SAKHALIN.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cable. Copyright, 1905.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 26.—A telegram from Harbin reports that Vladivostok is swarming with famine-stricken inhabitants of Sakhalin.

By The Associated Press.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 26.—The Russky Slovo of Moscow prints a dispatch from Vladivostok which indicates that the inhabitants of the whole maritime region of Eastern Siberia, including the Sakhalin and the Kamchatka Peninsula, are facing starvation on account of the situation produced by the war.

Word has been brought to Vladivostok from Okhotsk, Eastern Siberia, that the fish supply of Sakhalin was exhausted last Winter, and that the inhabitants ate their dogs. There is no flour on the island, and the people are confronted with death by starvation.

WE DO NOT WANT SAKHALIN.

Report That We Would Buy It Evokes Hilarity in Washington.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 26.—The Tenotechestva, a most radical anti-Government organ, prints the startling rumor that the United States Government is in the market for the purchase of the Island of Sakhalin.

The paper, which takes every opportunity to place the Russian Government in a poor light, says that the United States Government evidently believes that it can pick up the island with its rich forests and mines at a bargain, as Russia is unable to protect it.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 26.—The report that the United States wants to buy Sakhalin was received at the State Department to-day with a broad smile. On the highest authority it may be stated that the United States at present does not desire to buy any islands anywhere.

The Administration has no wish to extend our territorial possessions in the Orient, and if it did it would not be buying Sakhalin, title to which rests on seizure from Japan by Russia half a century ago.

A RUSH FOR THE BOOKS

Many Ministers Declared They Would Use Them, No Matter What the Assembly Said.

WINONA LAKE, Ind., May 26.—The report of the Committee on Forms of Service at the Presbyterian General Assembly was recommitted to-day, and the question will come up before the next General Assembly. Before this action was taken there were hours of lively debate, in which Dr. Henry Van Dyke, whose Prayer Book is a part of the proposed new form of service—led in favor of the change.

Dr. Van Dyke, as Chairman of the committee, urged the adoption of the report, saying:

"There is no ritualism in the Book of Prayer, and the report of the committee has been misunderstood. I hate rituals and forms of ceremonies. We have here a voluntary service for those who want it, for the common democracy in the Presbyterian Church. If I wanted to commit suicide I would choose some other way than by trying to impose a liturgy on the Presbyterian Church. Sixteen hundred Presbyterian ministers have written to the committee for a book of worship.

"Go into a Presbyterian Church to-day and you do not know what is coming next. Of course you know the collection is not coming first. How shall we meet this condition? Shall we let it go?"

He said some one had called these prepared prayers "canned prayers," but for two years he had been toiling on these prayers. Tears came into his eyes when he said he had in these two years gone to the mercy seat of God.

Before the Assembly met this afternoon 100 Commissioners climbed over seats and tables to get at the clerk's desk, where a man appeared with an armful of the Van Dyke Prayer Books. Several young ministers in the crowd said they would take the books home and use them, regardless of what action the Assembly took on the adoption of the books.

Before adjournment the Assembly adopted a resolution censuring the management of any college or university permitting the students to drink intoxicating liquors. The use of tobacco and manufacture and sale of cigarettes were condemned.

DOTTED WITH REGAL STORES

Each dot on this map marks the location of a store in which you can buy a pair of $6.00 shoes for $3.50 at any time.

There are no other stores on earth of which that statement could be made with truth.

Less than eleven years ago this map would have shown one solitary dot. The next year, two; the next, five. Yesterday, twenty-eight—and more coming.

Located where business rivalry is keenest, drawing vigor and success from an atmosphere surcharged with competition, each store has been opened because there was a demand for it and each has been continuously busy from the start.

Note how the stores cluster! They are thickest where competition is thickest. Of the twenty-eight, eighteen are in Manhattan; ten of these eighteen below 10th St. and six of the ten in and about the Wall St. district—famous for its carefully-dressed men. And wherever they are, they dominate their situation.

FOR BUSINESS WOMEN DOWN TOWN

There are others than men in business downtown, and the Regal stores have been located with the demand of the business woman in view. The stores at Nassau and Ann Sts., Broadway at Duane St. and Broadway at 10th St., combine, with the men's handsomely appointed stores where the faultless Regal Woman's Shoe is sold exclusively.

In all there are eleven of these Regal stores for women in Greater New York.

BRONX RESIDENTS WANT THREE-TRACK ELEVATED

To Urge Transit Board to Act to Relieve Traffic Crush.

METROPOLITAN FIGHTS PLAN

Threatens to Cut Out Express Service in Subway Bid If Interborough Application Is Granted.

An agitation has been started by the civic organizations and residents of the Bronx to have the Rapid Transit Commission grant permission for three-tracking the Second and Third Avenue elevated lines. Petitions are being prepared and mass meetings are to be held preparatory to having the Bronx adequately represented on Thursday next, when the commission is to hold a hearing on the Interborough Company's application.

Express trains from the City Hall to One Hundred and Forty-ninth Street in twenty-two minutes are promised by the Interborough with the additional tracks. An eighteen-minute express service from the City Hall to the Harlem River is promised as well as complete relief of the present congestion between One Hundred and Twenty-ninth and One Hundred and Forty-ninth Streets, where all of the trains of both the Second and Third Avenue lines run over two tracks. The only opposition at present to the three-track project comes from some property owners along the avenues concerned and from the Metropolitan Street Railway interests, which yesterday threatened to refuse to bid on the proposed subways in Third and Lexington Avenues should the Interborough elevated plans be approved.

Vice President E. P. Bryan of the Interborough Company said yesterday that the new tracks were necessary if the congestion in Harlem and the Bronx was to be relieved. He said that the engineers of his company had already prepared drawings for the enlargement of the bridge over the Harlem River and for the four-track route from the Harlem River to One Hundred and Forty-ninth Street, so that the work could be started at once if permission were granted. This would mean that the service would be in operation to the Harlem River by Fall and to One Hundred and Forty-ninth Street in less than a year.

"Conditions on the east side elevated lines are intolerable," said Mr. Bryan. "To the Harlem River we have four tracks in operation, two on Third Avenue and two on Second. From the One Hundred and Forty-ninth Street Station we have five tracks operating in the Bronx, three on the viaduct section of the Subway division, and two on the elevated line to Bronx Park. Between the Harlem River and One Hundred and Forty-ninth Street, however, we are restricted to two tracks, and it is impossible for us to run more trains than we now are running. It has come to such a pass that passengers can get out at One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Street and walk to One Hundred and Forty-ninth Street almost as quickly as they can be carried on the trains.

"We do not ask of the city anything that we are not willing to pay for. We will build the structure with our own money, and we will pay the city a rental equal to that paid by the Pennsylvania Railroad for its lines through the city, now building, and equal to the price to be paid by the New York and Jersey Railway Company for its subway from Christopher Street up Sixth Avenue to Thirty-fourth Street. We are also prepared to settle with all property owners along the line for proper damages, and would do so promptly without any litigation. Then, too, we would at once, and without waiting for the new roadway to be in operation, issue free transfers from all parts of the elevated and subway systems to other lines of the Interborough, thus giving an absolute five-cent fare from all sections of Manhattan to all sections of the Bronx."

The five-cent fare proposition is one of the striking features of the bid of the Interborough Company, as the Metropolitan system at no time has suggested a five-cent fare between the boroughs. The Union Railway, a Metropolitan company, does all of the Bronx business and collects additional fares. This is one of the reasons why the Bronx residents are urging the improvement of the elevated lines.

It became known yesterday that Paul D. Cravath of counsel for the Metropolitan interests had called on the members of the Rapid Transit Commission within the last three days and had intimated that if the board permitted the three-tracking of the Second and Third Avenue elevated lines the Metropolitan would not bid for four-track subways in Lexington and Third Avenues. In such an event, he intimated, the Metropolitan people would bid only for two-track subways for local service only.

A RAID ON DISHONEST SCALES.

Inspectors Destroy Twenty-five Pairs in Bridge Fish Market.

Patrick Derry, Chief of the Bureau of Weights and Measures in the Mayor's office, and a half dozen Inspectors descended on the army of fish dealers at the market at Delancey and Attorney Streets, under the Williamsburg Bridge, yesterday, and seized twenty-five or more pairs of scales, which were immediately destroyed.

Chief Inspector Derry has notified all dealers in this and other markets that like action would follow the seizure of any other scales found to be imperfect. He was emphatic in the declaration that dishonesty in weighing market products must cease.

Early this week complaint was made at the Mayor's office that the poor on the east side were being cheated by dealers in the Williamsburg Bridge market, who used defective scales. In some instances the Inspectors found scales varying from a quarter of a pound to three and four pounds.

TAMMANY LAWYER HELD.

Mr. Crisp's Auto Going Eighteen Miles an Hour, Policeman Said.

W. Benton Crisp, a member of Tammany's Law Committee, was held for special sessions in $100 bail yesterday in the West Side Court on a charge of violating the speed ordinance in his automobile.

"This is a prima facie case against you, Mr. Crisp," said Magistrate Wahle, "and I will have to hold you."

Mr. Crisp was accompanied to court by C. W. Trippers, who furnished bond. He gave his address as 35 Wall Street.

Bicycle Policeman England of the West Forty-seventh Street Station, who made the arrest, told the Magistrate that Mr. Crisp rode up Broadway from Forty-sixth Street to Fifty-second Street at the rate of eighteen miles an hour.

Mr. Crisp, who conducted his own case, tried to get the policeman to admit that he had not timed the automobile, but failed. The policeman alleged that Mr. Crisp and the friends who were with him

TEST FOR SUICIDAL INTENT.

Carbolic Acid Bottle Filled with Water —Prisoner Gulps Contents.

Gerald A. Rooney, forty years old, of 713 East One Hundred and Thirty-sixth Street, an Inspector of Sewers in the Bronx, went to the saloon of Eugene J. McGuire, Democratic leader of the Thirty-fourth Assembly District, north side, at One Hundred and Thirty-eighth Street and Third Avenue, and asked Fred Robinson, a bartender, for some writing paper. He then wrote two notes to his brother "Bob," saying that he would soon be dead, and then asked for a whisky glass. Unsuspecting, Robinson gave it to him.

Robinson saw Rooney take out a bottle and pour some liquid into the glass. Before he could drink it, however, Robinson had grabbed it. It was found to contain carbolic acid. Rooney was handed over to Policeman Rosenkranz, who took him to the station house. Capt. Ward emptied out the acid and filled the bottle with water, and handed it to Rooney to see if he really did desire to commit suicide.

Rooney did not know of the substitution and gulped down the liquid, when Ward told him to commit suicide if he wanted to. Rooney was apparently much surprised when he was not killed.

Rooney was thereupon arraigned in the Morrisania Court, charged with attempting suicide. He said it had all been a joke. He was discharged with a reprimand.

After Rooney was discharged from the Morrisania Court he was followed by Detective Robinson of the court squad for several blocks. Rooney entered a drug store and purchased some carbolic acid. The man then went to a saloon at One Hundred and Thirty-eighth Street and Brook Avenue. The detective followed him and arrested him.

The prisoner was taken to the Harlem Court, where he was arraigned before Magistrate Baker. Robinson explained the first arrest to the Magistrate, and told how Rooney had been discharged in court. Rooney was sent to the Island for an indeterminate sentence.

INVESTIGATES BANKER'S CASE

McAdoo Suspects Police of Trying to Favor Professional Bondsmen.

Whether or not there was an attempt on the part of the police in the arrest of Henry P. Davison, Vice President of the First National Bank of Englewood, N. J., for overspeeding his automobile to play into the hands of professional bondsmen, is a question which Commissioner McAdoo is investigating. He had before him yesterday at Police Headquarters Sergt. Hosey and plain-clothes men Troy and Bayer of the West Forty-seventh Street Station and Doorman Dorsch. Mr. Davison and a friend who was with him at the time of the arrest were also present.

Later in the afternoon the Commissioner transferred all the policemen concerned in the case to other precincts.

Mr. McAdoo said that suspicion that there might have been an attempt to play into the hands of the professional bondsmen was aroused by the fact that Mr. Davison, on refusing an offer of assistance, was at once locked up, whereas prior to that time he was allowed to use the Captain's office.

Mr. McAdoo said that Mr. Davison did not have $100 in his possession, and not being willing to leave his machine, asked for a blank check. The Sergeant permitted him to go into the Captain's office, where a blank check was found. Mr. Davison was told that a certain saloon keeper would cash the check. The policemen denied at the investigation yesterday that they referred specifically to any saloon keeper. Mr. Davison refused to send the check to the saloon keeper and his friend started for the Waldorf to have the check cashed. Then it was, according to the charge, that the Sergeant suddenly changed front and had Mr. Davison locked up.

MRS. PELL OBTAINS DIVORCE.

Court Here Does Not Recognize Husband's Florida Decree.

Justice Leventritt in the Supreme Court yesterday signed a final decree of divorce in favor of Anna Ogden Pell, whose husband, Duncan C. Pell, married again after he had obtained a Florida divorce on the ground that his wife had deserted him.

Mrs. Anna Ogden Pell paid no attention to the proceedings brought by her husband in Florida. The courts here did not recognize the Florida divorce, and permitted her to bring an action against her husband which resulted yesterday in the signing of the final decree in her favor.

By this decree she is permitted to marry again, and is given the custody of their two children, Duncan C. Pell, Jr., and Dorothy Pell. The court also made an order directing Duncan C. Pell to pay to the plaintiff $200 a month for the support of the children.

ACCUSE THE FLOORWALKER.

Held on Charge of Shoplifting in Place Where He Worked.

James F. O'Grady, forty years old, of 316 West Twenty-eighth Street, employed for the last two months as a floorwalker in a Sixth Avenue department store, was arraigned before Magistrate Moss in the Jefferson Market Police Court yesterday on a charge of shoplifting, and held in $1,000 bail for trial on that charge.

Store Detective Kash said that on Wednesday and Thursday certain articles were taken from the store. He declared that O'Grady had concealed an Eton jacket valued at $10.75 under his waistcoat when he left the store for the night. Kash, with Detective Sergeants Rein and Becker, went to O'Grady's rooms, and found there a quantity of stuff which the police allege had been stolen from the store where O'Grady was employed. O'Grady was then arrested.

MINISTER COMPLAINS AGAIN.

Has Manager of Crotona Casino Up for Violating Sabbath Law.

The Rev. S. T. Willis of 1,181 Union Avenue, pastor of the Church of the Disciples of Christ, at One Hundred and Sixty-ninth Street and Fordham Avenue, appeared as complainant against John Bartels, the manager of the Crotona Casino, at 975 and 977 East One Hundred and Sixty-ninth Street, in the Morrisania Court yesterday, charging him with violating the Sabbath law and with maintaining a public nuisance.

Mr. Willis a month or more ago made a similar complaint, and Bartels was fined $10. Mr. Willis said that the nuisance had not abated since then. The case was adjourned.

McAdoo Still After "Red" Regan.

Police Commissioner McAdoo is still after "Red" Regan, wanted in connection with the shooting in the café at Thirty-first Street and Broadway recently. The Commissioner said yesterday that he proposed to catch Regan if he had to follow him all over the country.

White Caps on Police Warn Autoists.

The bicycle policemen are in danger of losing their white caps. Commissioner McAdoo said yesterday that he had been told that automobilists who violate the law are able to see the caps of the policemen at a great distance, and then slacken their speed.

SQUABBLE AT HEARING BEFORE GOV. HIGGINS

Bill to Let Gotham Hotel Sell Liquor the Cause.

EQUITABLE DINNER RECALLED

S. B. Brownell of Fifth Avenue Church in Wordy War with Rand—Not Nan Patterson, He Says.

ALBANY, May 26.—The hearing before Gov. Higgins this afternoon on the bill designed to permit the Gotham Hotel, about to be opened opposite the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, in New York City, to sell liquor, was marked by a lively tilt between Assistant District Attorney William Rand, Jr., who appeared for the proprietor of the Gotham, and S. B. Brownell, Secretary of the New York City Bar Association and clerk of the Fifth Avenue Church session.

Mr. Rand had asserted that the St. Regis Hotel, which stands on the neighboring corner, and would also be affected by the bill, was a quieter place on Sunday morning than the church.

"I am not speaking of what occurs at the hotel in the morning," said Mr. Brownell, "but after 9 o'clock at night. The members of our church are not in the habit of going to the St. Regis, and don't know what takes place there; but I appeal to what has been in the newspapers in reference to the Equitable dinner there. If you are going to try to place a hotel within sixty feet of us we will remind you of that dinner, which cost $61,000 and was paid for."

Mr. Rand retorted, and the Governor was forced to end the discussion after Mr. Brownell had told the Assistant District Attorney that he was impertinent, and remarked that he (Brownell) was not Nan Patterson.

The Governor's hearing was on two proposed amendments to the excise law, Senator Ambler's bill designed to check the so-called Raines law hotel evil by putting such places under the supervision of the building authorities or corresponding officials, who shall report whether they keep the law, and Senator Saxe's bill, already referred to, which permits the sale of liquor within 200 feet (the present prohibitive distance) of a church, by a large hotel having 200 or more rooms.

The former was supported by representatives of several temperance and religious organizations of New York City, and opposed by representatives of the liquor dealers and brewers.

Judge William M. K. Olcott, appearing for the lager beer brewers' Board of Trade, said that the provisions in the bill permitting Building Inspectors to remove partitions was absurd and a clear violation of personal liberty. "We're only pleading for judgment after a trial," said he, "which the bill in its present form denies. It is confiscation in its worst form."

The protest of the United Liquor Dealers' Association of Kings County was voiced by Alexander D. Newman, who said that while he and his associates were anxious to abolish disreputable houses they did not wish it done in this way. Speaking of the chances of blackmail, he said:

"The liquor dealers as a class are the biggest cowards in business. All a man has to do is to enter a saloon and look around and the proprietor tremblingly puts his hand in his pocket and asks him what he wants."

Those who appeared in favor of the bill dwelt mainly upon the evil character of the so-called Raines law hotel.

INQUIRY INTO McAVOY'S ACT.

Treatment of Man Who Arrested Grant's Driver Stirs McAdoo.

Commissioner McAdoo began an investigation yesterday of the case of Policeman James V. McCarthy, on trial before Deputy Commissioner Lindsley, charged with unnecessarily arresting the coachman of ex-Mayor Grant and with detaining unnecessarily the occupants of the victoria. The arrest was made on the afternoon of May 12, and late the same day McCarthy was transferred from the mounted squad to the East One Hundred and Fourth Street Station by Deputy Commissioner McAvoy, who was Acting Commissioner that day in the absence of Mr. McAdoo.

Deputy Commissioner McAvoy, Mr. McAdoo was informed, was made an Inspector under Mayor Grant's administration, and was a favorite of the ex-Mayor.

Commissioner McAdoo ordered his secretary to furnish him a complete record of the trial. Deputy Commissioner Lindsley reserved his decision when the hearing of the case was finished yesterday.

Loving Cup for Judge Newburger.

Judge Joseph E. Newburger, now sitting in Part IV. of the Court of General Sessions, was the recipient yesterday of a beautiful silver loving cup, two feet high. The cup is a gift from members of the present panel of jurors.

"Qui s' excuse, s' accuse," says the French proverb; he who excuses himself, accuses himself.

The other day we said that at last a defense had been offered for the "mercerized cotton" cheat in clothing fabrics.

Now we think we were mistaken; it wasn't a defense; it was an excuse, an apology. If makers and dealers in the "mercerized cotton" cheat should frankly tell the truth about it they couldn't sell it; they're too honest to lie about it, so they say nothing.

Meanwhile the market is filled with goods that do their own lying; they present a pleasing appearance to the eye, they feel soft and fine to the hand; they are often from 40 to 75 per cent. cotton; they will wear and look like it in a few weeks.

If you are not sure of your dealer, be sure of our label; it means all-wool honesty, tailoring, style; it's a small thing to look for, a big thing to find.

PRISONERS IN A MOVING VAN.

Henkel Starts to Drive and Runs Afoul of Traffic Policeman.

United States Marshal Henkel had no end of trouble yesterday with thirty Italian prisoners, recently sentenced to brief terms in the Kings County Penitentiary for naturalization frauds. The men had all presented purchased certificates of citizenship at Ellis Island.

To get his prisoners to the outskirts of Brooklyn the Marshal got a moving van. Somebody told the driver, a big German, that he was to haul a load of bloodthirsty Italians, who would try to cut his throat. The Marshal and his deputies had a hard time persuading him to make the trip.

With the wagon as guards were Deputy Marshal "Big Mike" Blake, who is trying to wrest the Republican leadership from Joseph Joshof in the Thirteenth Assembly District, and Deputies James Reed, Edward Dooner, and John Aikner. The Marshal, to calm the German's fears, took the reins himself. The wagon started down Park Row on the wrong side, with the result that it soon ran afoul of a mounted policeman, who threatened to have the Marshal arrested. Mr. Henkel retorted that it was more likely that he would arrest the policeman. It looked for a time as though United States Commissioner Shields and a Police Magistrate would have to be called upon to adjudicate matters. Deputy Circuit Clerk Edick came along, however, and straightened matters out. At the Bridge Marshal Henkel got disgusted with his job and turned the wagon over to Deputy Blake. The majority of the prisoners, after serving their sentences, will be returned to Ellis Island and deported for attempting to enter the country by fraudulent means.

Mayor Begins Long Branch Trips.

Champions Have No Trouble to Beat the Brooklyns by 6 to 0.

The Brooklyn team in its first series of games with the New Yorks at Washington Park in April gave its adherents much encouragement by breaking even with the champions in four games, but since then Hanlon's men have played such an erratic game that when the two teams began a series of five contests at the Polo Grounds yesterday the New Yorks had an overwhelming lead, while the Brooklyns brought up the rear. Nothing was shown yesterday by the Brooklynites to indicate that they were as strong as in the first meeting with McGraw's men; in fact, the opinion was freely expressed that they had deteriorated, and there was a sufficient justification why they should be the last team in the race.

The rearrangement of the Washington Park team had something to do with its shutout yesterday, for Mitchell alone, who played first base in place of Babb, showed a weakness that was painfully apparent. Then Lumley and Dobbs were both absent, but the loss of the former was not so keenly felt as that of Dobbs, for Malay, who played in the latter's place, was very weak at the bat. The New Yorks did not have much the advantage of Brooklyn in fielding, but they finally gauged McIntyre's delivery, and with the assistance of Mitchell's damaging errors and unsteadiness of the pitcher they collected six runs. McIntyre did finely for four innings. In the fourth inning, with three men on bases and only one out, he retired the side without a run, winding up his good work by striking out Gilbert.

In the sixth inning a clash between Bowerman, who was on first base, and Mitchell looked imminent. Bergen had thrown the ball to Mitchell to catch Bowerman off the base, and the runner and baseman became entangled. When Mitchell got to his feet he struck a rather threatening attitude and Umpire O'Day was compelled to leave second base to settle the disturbance.

Mitchell was responsible for the two runs of the New Yorks in the fifth inning, for he played first base like a novice when Bowerman hit to Owens. After two were out Donlin's force hit and a single by Browne and McGann's hit brought in two runs. Mitchell made another bad error in the sixth inning, and a three-base hit and a double scored two more runs. Good batting by Browne, Mertes, and Devlin; McGann's sacrifice and a wild throw by Bergen gave the New Yorks their fifth and sixth runs.

The nearest the Brooklyns came to scoring was in the first inning, when they had two men on bases—at third and second. Taylor, however, pitched effectively, and the men were left on the bases.

Pitcher Hess's First Hit of Season Beat Greater New Yorks.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, May 26.—Pitcher Hess made the hit that won for Cleveland to-day in the tenth inning of what was one of the most hotly contested games ever played on League Park. From start to finish it was a pitchers' battle between Hess and Orth, and the latter was pitted against Otto Hess. After nine innings both sides drew goose eggs, New York having gotten but two hits off Hess and Cleveland having taken four scattering hits from Orth.

In the first half of the tenth inning Chase, who had replaced Williams at second, made a clean hit, but was doubled up with Anderson, when Stovall ran in, taking Anderson's low fly and catching Chase off first. Yeager sent a hot drive that Bradley could not handle quick enough, and when Conroy got a hit, placing the shortstop on third, it looked like the visitors' game, as Hess was getting weary of his hard work in the box. But McGuire went out on a fly and the crowd rose en masse and shouted for Hess.

Stovall came to the bat and in response to cries "Hit her out" went to second on Chase's fumble of a high fly. Buelow put him on third with a sacrifice and then Hess, who had struck out three times during the game, made his first hit of the season, driving in the winning run.

The game was replete with brilliant fielding, both teams doing excellent work. Bradley ran into Williams at second in the eighth inning and temporarily put him out of the game, Chase taking his place. Jackson, who was on left for Cleveland, objected to being called out for grabbing Orth's arm when running to first, and was put out of the game.

Hogg and Moore will probably be the pitchers for to-morrow's game. The score:

PHILADELPHIA, 5; DETROIT, 2.

DETROIT, Mich., May 26.—Bender's pitching was entirely too much for the Detroits to-day and gave Philadelphia the second game of the series. The visitors hit Killian hard and often, and the fielding of the locals was poor. Crawford's work on first and at bat and Davis's fielding were features. Detroit has released Catcher Sullivan, who probably returns to St. Paul. Score:

Rapp's Hit for a Home Run Beats Newark Team at Toronto.

Special to The New York Times.

TORONTO, Ontario, May 26.—Rapp's hard drive to right field for a home run when two men were on bases, scoring three runs for Toronto, was the feature of the game this afternoon, in which the Newarks were defeated by the score of 4 to 3. In the last inning Connor, who went to the bat for Latimer, stepped on the home plate when he had three balls and two strikes against him. The ball which struck him would have been a strike, and the umpire called him out. In the last two innings Washer of the Newarks was replaced by Moriarty. Score:

FIVE FAVORITES DEFEATED

With a single favorite first in six races, the results at the Gravesend track yesterday fell far short of the expectations of the backers, but in spite of the untoward results interest in the happenings of the day never lagged for a moment. As matters developed, the real interest of the crowd was manifested in the new betting situation rather than in the betting itself, and the fact that only a single favorite was first failed to detract in the least from the interest that the peculiar condition of the betting arrangement aroused.

Aside from the betting there was a notable change, however, for even the most optimistic patrons of the grand stand inclosure conceded a falling off in the patronage of that section of the public domain, while every one concerned admitted that the patronage of the field stand had been increased with a rush. The difference was due to the difference in the prices fixed for the two inclosures, and it was not in the least surprising to the great body of racegoers that persons who only wished to bet on the races should show a preference for paying $1 as against the grand stand fee of $2.

On the attendance of yesterday, when there were perhaps three thousand visitors in the grand stand inclosure against about six thousand in the field stand, there was ground for the complaints that were uttered by the bookmakers that there was a most unusual lack of business in the betting ring. As the bookmakers now pay nothing for the exercise of their privileges, their complaint had no especial weight beyond the establishing of the fact that even a free ring is not altogether an ideal thing for the bookmaker where there is competition.

The weather was pleasant and clear and the track fast. For the stake feature of the card, the Patchogue Stakes, at six furlongs, selling, for three-year-olds and upward, a full dozen of the thirteen horses named on the card answered the call to the post, with the aged sprinter, King Pepper, the favorite at 7 to 2. Right and True was one of the best-backed horses in the race, however, at the long odds which prevailed at the opening of the betting, and when the start was made Right and True broke in first place and went straight on in the lead, winning rather easily at the finish by four lengths from Montreson, which was second all the way and which finished clear of Lery C., third.

The only winning favorite of the day won in the first race of the card, when Last Cherry, backed for a good thing by the persons in the know, went on to the front after Toots Mook led into the last quarter. Last Cherry then won a rather remarkable race, pulled up, a short head before Duenna, which was second. In the second race the good colt Escutcheon, after trailing Old England into the stretch, went on and won in clever style from the pacemaker. Summaries:

THE MORAL OF PHILADELPHIA.

The decent people of Philadelphia are at this moment fighting the fight of the decent people of every municipality in the United States. Their predicament is that to which the decent people of every other municipality are at all times exposed. "There are diversities of operation, but the same law." The law is that professional politicians, people who get their livings out of offices and official opportunities will, in ordinary times, circumvent and defeat the decent people who pay the expenses of Municipal Governments and who have something else than politics to do.

The moral of Philadelphia seems to be that there is a line which the taxeaters cannot cross with impunity in their chronic war on the taxpayers. The Philadelphia taxeaters have crossed it. Their Mayor, for he was theirs, was the same sort of respectable figurehead that the municipal ring commonly tries to get to reconcile the taxpayers to its pretensions. In a general way, Mr. WEAVER seems to have answered well enough the purpose of his creation. We have had many a Mayor of the same kind here in New York. But when the ring in Philadelphia waxed exceeding bold and undertook to sell not only their own birthright, but that of their fellow-citizens and their posterity, for a mess of pottage to be divided among themselves, the roar of public indignation that went up sufficed to frighten the ringsters and to disaffect the Mayor from their schemes. The advantage of the concentration of official responsibility was seen in the fact that the Mayor utterly refused to assume the undivided responsibility of the action of which each one of the associated public plunderers found his own small share easy to bear.

The Mayor, having been forced to break with the ring, took good advice as to how to defeat its machinations. The first thing he did, and the most efficacious thing he could have done, was to turn out of office the prominent ringsters, with all the gang of their sinecurist henchmen. This energetic action has had its effect. He has the power to turn out of office some twenty thousand taxeaters, and he has shown a determination to exercise this power. The result of this action is not merely to diffuse apprehension and alarm among all the hangers-on of the ring, but specifically to frighten the members of the local legislature which was expected, at the bidding of its Boss, to overrule without question the Mayor's veto of the gas grab. Those of the legislators who acknowledge "a decent respect to the opinions of mankind," and who desire to stand well with decent people, those of them to whom their political future is of importance, even leaving out of account their eternal future, are flocking to cover, are abandoning the standard of the Boss, and taking refuge under the standard of the Mayor.

The ultimate moral is that the cure of our municipal evils, the ugliest and most dangerous scandals of our democracy, is to be found and sought in the concentration of power and the consequent concentration of responsibility. Specifically, it is an abundant justification of the stripping of the Board of Aldermen of New York of all substantial powers and the transfer of those powers to a body of which the responsibility is real. It is even a justification of still further narrowing and concentrating power and responsibility. By that method it is true that we may occasionally draw, in the lottery of municipal elections, a pachyderm of a Van Wyck, who has that power of defying public opinion which, according to MACAULAY, requires either the worst and meanest or the best and noblest of mankind. But the chances are much greater that we shall draw a Weaver, who, even though in a way the creature of the conspiracy of which he is the figurehead, will yet refuse to go all lengths which the imaginations of the Boss may reach, and to abandon all the associates and associations who and which for a sensitive citizen make was finally passed in its present shape by means of an emergency message from the Governor. Such a message is a formal certificate to the Legislature that in the sober judgment of the Governor the bill is so important to the interests of the public that the Legislature ought to take action on it in the closing days of the session, when only a few selected and urgent measures can be acted on. While such a message is not, of course, a pledge on the part of the Governor that he will not exercise his discretion with reference to a measure, it makes it extremely improbable that he will condemn it. He could have condemned it to death by letting it alone.

The aim of the bill is so sound and the means proposed to accomplish that aim are so simple and expedient that we cannot imagine the Governor failing to approve it. As argued from time to time by the Committee of Fourteen, with whom the bill originated, the plain and sole purpose of the bill is to suppress the revolting abuses arising in connection with the Raines law hotels by making the lessees or owners of these hotels comply with the provisions with which they swear in their applications they have compiled. Under the law as it stands, though they commit perjury in thus swearing, their testimony must be taken as conclusive and they must get their licenses. Under the pending amendments there must be an adequate inspection by the proper departments, and if it be found that the requirements of the law have not been met, the license must be withheld, or, if already granted, it must be revoked. It will be seen that there is absolutely nothing in this in the least degree arbitrary, oppressive, or extreme. There is not even any change in the essential nature or purpose of the law. There is only sensible and practical provision for the effective enforcement of the law. Honestly, we can see no possible reason why any rational citizen, from the Governor down, should object to the amendments. They simply break up a profitable traffic in perjury which has given rise to unspeakably vile abuses.

THE OWNERSHIP OF RAILROADS.

It would appear from evidence collected by the Inter-State Commerce Commission and communicated to the Senate, that the ownership of the railroad system of this country is not as widely diffused as has been supposed. On the 30th of June, 1904, the 1,220 railroads reporting to the Commission had only 327,851 stockholders of record. This total includes many duplications, as it was impossible to know in how many instances one capitalist was represented in the stockholding interest of several railroads. Assuming the population of the United States to be, in round figures, eighty millions, the entire mileage of the railroads doing an inter-State business is owned by about four-tenths of 1 per cent. of the people of this country. The widest distribution of the stock of any one road is that of the Pennsylvania, with 44,175 stockholders. The entire New York Central system has only a little more than half as many—24,941. These figures are not particularly significant of anything, but they are interesting as correcting the impression that the ownership of our railroads is widely diffused among all classes of our people. As a matter of fact, it is restricted to a very small class, and the total number is a little less than the population of Cincinnati, which stands ninth in the list of our cities.

THE CHURCH AND THE HOTEL.

The committees representing the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church who are protesting against the signing of the Saxe bill, which would permit the issue of a license for the sale of wines and liquors to the new Hotel Gotham across the street, have unusual need of candor, of openmindedness, and of the quality of being reasonable. Otherwise they are sure to fall into the error of combating the bill with weak arguments.

The laws of the State of New York prohibit the issue of licenses for the sale of liquor within two hundred feet of a church. This law, as everybody knows, was designed to prevent the impropriety and open scandal of the establishment and carrying on of the saloon business upon the same blocks with churches or near them. Nobody would favor the opening of a saloon managed conspicuously and exclusively as a place for the sale of liquors at retail, with all the customary equipment of window advertisement and signs inviting the attention of the passerby to the business carried on within. But the Saxe bill against which the committees of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church protest has no such purpose. It authorizes the issue of a license to hotels having more than two hundred sleeping rooms. That makes the bill general in its purpose and restricts its application to first-class hotels of the largest size. Now first-class hotels in the City of New York, while they have barrooms or buffets and sell wines and liquors to their guests, are not "saloons." They do not have street entrances to their barrooms, access to which is had only through the passages and corridors of the building. It is in no sense evaded. It is not at all reasonable for the committees of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church to say, as they did say in a letter of protest sent to the Governor, that the signing of the Saxe bill would be against the policy of the State to preserve orderly peace and quiet for all classes of citizens in their attendance and worship in their churches. Peace, good order, and quiet neighborhood would not be disturbed or affected by the sale of wines or liquors in any hotel in this State having two hundred sleeping rooms. Nor was it reasonable to say that this bill would legalize "in a big Fifth Avenue hotel what would be a crime in a small hotel on the Bowery and Grand Street." Small hotels on the Bowery and Grand Street have barroom entrances from the public highway. The case is entirely dissimilar, and the use of this comparison indicates the paucity of good arguments at the command of the committees.

This question is, after all, one of a somewhat broad and general nature. It is said that the expenditure incurred for the erection and equipment of the hotel against which this protest is directed has exceeded the sum of $3,000,000. This represents a very large addition to assessed valuation in the City of New York. The Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, like all church property, is exempt from taxation. Now the question for the gentlemen of the church committee to consider is, whether they are altogether reasonable in taking this stern attitude against the conferring of a privilege which demonstrably would cause them no scandal, injury, or offense of the eye, while the withholding of it at their instance would cause an immense loss of money to those who have invested in the hotel property, even if it does not ruin the undertaking altogether. The gentlemen of the committees do not need to be told that a first-class hotel cannot be successfully continued without a State license to sell wines and liquors. Nobody advocates the diminution of the exemptions and privileges enjoyed by church property. Nobody would wish to relax existing statutes essential to protect the churches from unpleasant neighbors. That being the attitude of the public toward the churches it is a question which the gentlemen of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church should seriously consider, whether they ought to push to an unreasonable extreme their just objection to the open carrying on of any undesirable business near that place of worship.

RULES OF CONDUCT.

Baron ALPHONSE ROTHSCHILD, who died in Paris yesterday, deemed it a service to the young men of France who were ambitious of emulating his success in business and becoming great capitalists, to distribute among them cards on which were printed the following rules as to habits and conduct:

Shun liquor.
Dare to go forward.
Never be discouraged.
Be polite to everybody.
Employ your time well.
Never tell business lies.
Pay your debts promptly.
Be prompt in everything.
Bear all troubles patiently.
Do not reckon upon chances.
Make no useless acquaintances.
Be brave in the struggle of life.
Maintain your integrity as a sacred thing.
Never appear to be something more than you are.
Take time to consider; then decide positively.
Carefully examine into every detail of your business.

These are good rules. They belong in the classification of Counsels of Perfection. The difficulty with them is that the average young man of France, or, for that matter, of any other nation, would need to go back several generations and select his ancestors in order to be prepared to follow them. The shape of the average head does not accommodate itself to the brain development to which such a code would appeal, and a young man who was able to make them his rules of conduct would probably need no good advice from any one.

It must be conceded, however, that one who could follow the Rothschild code would arrive at success inevitably, if he lived long enough. That one does not, as the rule, follow it is no doubt partly his fault, but perhaps not wholly so.

TRADES UNION AMENITIES.

One inclined to deplore the development of trades unionism in this country along the lines which have been followed in the Chicago teamsters' and other recent strikes in the relatively unskilled occupations may derive some poor consolation from the fact that crimes committed in the name of organized labor are not the product of democracy, but occur where political liberty is known only as an academic proposition. An English firm obtained the contract from the City of Milan for the erection of a municipal gas works. It is said that never was a work of comparable magnitude begun, carried forward, and completed under equal difficulties. In deciding a suit against the city in which the contractors were successful, the Judge described as follows some of the difficulties referred to:

> pennings in sleepy old Milan, but such is the record. When these things are done in this country we are apt to make the mistake of attributing it to our political system, but obviously the cause lies deeper and must be sought in the vagaries of human nature.

JUDGE VAN BRUNT.

The sudden death of Judge VAN BRUNT, only a few months in advance of the date of his compulsory retirement, points in a particular way the trite moral, "What shadows we are and what shadows we pursue." For it shows the futility of that project of Judge VAN BRUNT'S friends to provide remunerative and satisfactory employment for him after his retirement, which brought upon him the only scandal of his judicial career.

According to those best qualified to judge, whether on the bench or at the bar, Judge VAN BRUNT was richly endowed with those peculiar faculties which make "a born Judge," and was by intrinsic right the presiding Judge of a tribunal which has already, though of so recent a creation, approved itself one of the most weighty and respectable courts in the United States. He was never the dupe of his own ingenuity or of that of anybody else, as is the frequent snare of subtle and distinguishing minds. This is by no means to say that he was without ingenuity. It is to say that he had an intellect of such inherent sanity and equity that he always went straight to the true point, and easily brushed away the cobwebs with which over-subtlety might have attempted to conceal it. He has had able colleagues, no doubt. But we judge that those colleagues would be the first to insist that his individual share of credit for the standing of the court is greater than that of any other member of it, and that he was, in fact as in title, its presiding genius. Such a judicial reputation is more than a professional, it is a public possession.

The decision of the Rapid Transit Commission as to Fourteenth Street, which provides for a four-track subway from the Hudson River to a connection with the bridge loop between Avenues B and C, appears to be a very satisfactory solution of the problem of cross-town travel at that point. Besides a connection with the Williamsburg, Manhattan, and Brooklyn Bridges, and a tunnel connection with Williamsburg, this subway will have two spurs running to the lower part of the city on the west side, one reaching to Liberty and William Streets, and the other to the Brooklyn Bridge terminal. The problem of rapid transit for New York is now in a way to be solved on a magnificent scale, but the average citizen finds difficulty in keeping up with the work of the Plans Committee of the commission, the more so if he attempts to follow the ramifications of the work proposed in Brooklyn. There is still a good deal of adjustment and adaptation to be done, and then it will all be simple enough.

"The people? We are the people!" exclaimed "Boss" DURHAM yesterday from behind Senator PENROSE'S door, when asked whether he did not feel the danger of the people's aroused indignation. Insolence intrenched in the office of a Pennsylvania United States Senator, himself the centre of an organized fight openly in favor of local graft, is of such hoary precedent that, until recently, its chief city has forgotten who are in fact the people.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Impartiality and "Bitterness."

It was very easy for one of our correspondents to say, yesterday, that the way to end the "bitterness" between the North and the South—if there really is any, he had the wise caution to interpolate—is to write and teach in the schools impartial histories of the causes, the course, and the consequences of the civil war. There is always, however, something suspicious about remedies so simple for troubles so extremely complex as is the one he was discussing. In the first place, it is highly improbable that an absolutely impartial history ever was or ever can be written, even of events much more than forty years back in the past, and when events are remote the gain of impartiality, such as it is, comes invariably at the cost of completeness, if not quite always at that of accuracy. It is entirely hopeless to expect any American, though his Americanism be of recent date, to write more of a history of the civil war than a tabular enumeration of its battles would form, and still not express opinions, not draw deductions, that some would not charge with partiality and misapprehension. The chances are that, a few hired hacks excepted, every historian intends to be impartial, to tell the facts as they are, and to reason about them with straight logic. It is hardly conceivable that any history was ever put in a school because it was known to convey false impressions or when it was even suspected of doing so by those exercising the power of selection. To say that they have been or are unfair is probably true to a greater or less degree, but it is also to beg the questions still at issue, for the partiality of one is the impartiality of another, and the quality of a history as to fairness is a matter of opinion, not of fact. It would be inexpedient as well as absurd to present to the children in all parts of the country the arguments used by both North and South, with the expectation that the infants could weigh them judicially and reach correct conclusions. Right and wrong were inextricably mixed in that great controversy, and the fact that we are all fast settling into an admiration of the heroic qualities displayed by both sides is the best evidence that the bitterness is passing away. Let us not try to hasten the process by writing and teaching impartial history.

Education of the Engineer.

Mr. H. H. BROUGHTON, writing in The Electrical Magazine, suggests a plan for making electrical engineers who shall be strong in both the theory and the practice of their profession—something, as all know who have given any attention to the subject, that is much desired, and something which the technical schools, if their critics can be believed, have not yet succeeded in doing. Mr. BROUGHTON would catch his electrical engineer very young say, at fifteen years of age, and when he had completed the elementary education that is needed for all. He would put him at once into a shop and keep him there for three years, working hard for fifty or sixty hours a week in practical commercial conditions. Then he would give him college training for three years and complete his course by another year in the shop. The advantages claimed for this system are that the man goes to college with a very fair knowledge of practice, conversant with the various processes, knowing something about the properties of materials and machines, and fully alive to what will be expected of him when he rubs shoulders with the world. That the man would begin studying for his profession at an age when he is most capable of doing so, and when he realizes the hard, grinding work necessary to make a successful career, are also adduced as recommendations for the system. It is a pretty scheme, and obviously there is something in it, but there is room for doubt that three years of hard work, most of it manual or little better, is the best of preparations for the study of mathematics and pure science. And are not the constant efforts to bring theory and practice into harmony based on a mistaken notion as to the kind and amount of antagonism between them?

To Sign or Not to Sign.

For a member of Parliament, Mr. WINSTON CHURCHILL has been expressing some curiously nonsensical ideas as to the proper conduct of newspapers. While admitting that the French newspapers, as such, were decidedly inferior to those of England and America, he yet extolled the greater frequency with which the French journalists are allowed to sign their articles, and declared that by anonymity the newspaper man's weight and authority in politics were decreased or lost. That is probably true, but the newspaper man's loss is the newspaper's gain, and between the values of the one and the other to the public choice is easy. A signed article is one man's opinion, important or not as the case may be, but an unsigned article is or pretends to be something a good deal better and bigger. By presumption, and usually in fact, it embodies the judgment of several persons on the lookout for the errors resulting from the personal equation, and so the public gets a safer production than under the other plan. After all, the question is one of needs and tastes. Experience has demonstrated that when signatures are much in vogue news tends to diminish in quantity and to deteriorate in quality, and anybody who doesn't worry about that has the best of rights to prefer the French papers, not that they contain stronger, or even finer, articles than do those made on a different plan, but because there is little or nothing in them to distract attention from the strong or fine articles they contain.

TROUBLE OVER WINDOW PLANTS

To the Editor of The New York Times:

For the past eight years I have lived in New York in an apartment house on the west side. My wife is very fond of plants, and every Summer we have had in our front window a box of flowers, which has been a source of great pleasure to us both. This box has been securely fastened to the window ledge in such a manner that it would be impossible for it to fall off.

On reaching home last night, my wife informed me that a policeman had been there during the day and ordered all plant boxes, &c., removed from the windows on the penalty of a fine. Will you kindly inform me what rights, if any, I have in the matter? I frequently read in the papers about the growing taste of people for flowers, evinced by the window displays. Last night I took a walk and discovered numerous boxes and plants still remaining in windows in the different parts of the city from that in which I reside.

I have been informed that if a box is securely fastened, I am at liberty to have one on my window sill, and should like to know just what rights I have in a matter of this kind. UPPER WEST SIDE.

Locked Doors on Ferryboats.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There are four new ferryboats running between Hoboken and New York during rush hours. The lower and upper cabins of these boats are crowded to the utmost. Only four very small doors open from the upper cabin to the deck outside. The four double doors have never been open, but are always locked for no apparent reason, even when there is standing room only in the upper cabin. The windows are scarcely to be opened. Now, what use would life preservers be in case of an accident if only a few people could get out of the cabin? Of course, the windows could be broken, but that would only make the panic more general. Would it not be a safe policy for the company to have those doors unlocked, so that they would be available in case of accident?

A Considerate Automobilist.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am a horse owner, and my business takes me on an old-fashioned thoroughfare of the city, far from the madding crowd. My horse is fractious, and many times I have remarked the total lack of courtesy and ignorance of the first rules of the road exhibited by the general run of auto drivers. I am pleased to note an exception to this rule. A few days ago a large red car came down the road, the horse proceeded to bolt, and was with difficulty restrained. What was my surprise when the car stopped and the owner alighted. He questioned me politely about the horse, and started in then and there (with my consent) to give the horse a lesson on the mystery of an auto car. I asked him his name, which was Thomas Hitchcock. Bronx Mosquito Factories.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The letter in your columns signed "Bronx" and referring to several mosquito factories is very timely. One place referred to is certainly a pest hole; that is east of Jerome Avenue at One Hundred and Sixty-fifth Street. Here the original head waters of Cromwell's Creek have been dammed off by a new street, leaving a

SERVICES IN THE PARKS.

Evangelists Preach in Madison and Union Squares.

Open-air rallies were held yesterday afternoon in Madison and Union Square Parks under the auspices of the Evangelistic Committee. The rallies were the first of a series of midday religious meetings to be held in the small parks this Summer.

The meetings yesterday were in charge of the Rev. Bradford Williams, formerly a theatrical man, who drove to the parks in a four-horse wagon with the Salvation Army National Staff Band, in charge of Major Andersen. The music by the band soon drew the "benchers" around the wagon. The Rev. James B. Healy, Superintendent of the Evangelistic Committee, said a few words, and a sermon by the Rev. Dr. W. W. White of the Bible Teachers' Training School followed.

Bishop Frederick Courtney is to be the principal speaker at a mass meeting to be held in the Academy of Music to-morrow afternoon at 4 o'clock. Dr. Courtney was formerly Bishop of Nova Scotia in the Church of England, and is now rector of St. James's Episcopal Church in this city. Again to-day at noon there will be open-air meetings in Madison and Union Squares. On Monday at noon there will be meetings in the Wall Street district, one on the steps of the Custom House and one in front of the Stock Exchange.

PENSIONS NO CRIMINALS.

Secretary of Bankers' Association Says None Is Paid to Stay Good.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Noticing an intimation in your columns this morning that some clever professional criminals are pensioned, or paid by the American Bankers' Association to refrain from practicing their crimes and illegal profession on banks members of this association, I write to state most positively that this organization does not pay criminals in any way, shape, or form, nor has it ever done so. We rely on the efforts of our detective agents and other influence we bring to bear to instill in the mind of a professional that it is unwise and hazardous to depredate on one of our members.

Since 1895 we have convicted and imprisoned 270 forgers, 18 swindlers, and 205 bank burglars. Three criminals have been sentenced to death and executed. The total sentences of these convictions amount to nearly 3,000 years. Statistics show that out of the numerous criminal operations against the banks and bankers of the country, only a small proportion were directed toward our members.

Yours respectfully,
JAMES R. BRANCH,
Secretary Pro. Com.

NOISES AT BALL GAMES.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Will you kindly use your influence to put an end to the vendor nuisance in the stands at the National League ball games at the Polo Grounds? From the entrance of the first spectator until the finish of the game there is one continuous cry of "Get your extra double-jointed back-action peanuts!" "Chewing gum, cigars, and cigarettes!" "Score cards!" Luscious, nice easy cushions!" "Who'll have the waiter?" &c. It is true we need score cards, but save us from the rest of the howl.

Why cannot a stand be placed in the rear of the seats where patrons may supply their wants without having their and their neighbors' enjoyment of both the game and the afternoon spoiled? The noise last Saturday was so great that it was impossible to hear the announcement of the batteries and the majority of the decisions. These vendors when requested to move and not obstruct the view show their independence by standing still or retorting in the most classic assortment of Billingsgate known. Cannot you use your endeavors to abate this nuisance and render us all grateful? J. B. T.

TRIALS OF RED COATS.

British Army Needs 4,000 Wealthy Officers.

From The London Express.

The military forces of the Crown are, by the latest computation, 4,000 officers short of the requirements as laid down in the army and auxiliary establishments for 1905-6.

This serious shortage, combined with the fact that resignations are still as numerous as ever, is causing considerable misgiving in the minds of the authorities, and conferences are now taking place at the War Office under the Director of Staff Duties and other officials, the object of which is to find a remedy for the situation.

The bankruptcy of an officer, whose examination was held at Colchester recently, has shown the futility of subalterns attempting to meet their expenses out of their pay. The decision of the Army Council that this officer should resign has spread alarm throughout the subaltern ranks of the army, for numbers of young officers are heavily in debt to tradesmen or in the hands of money lenders.

In spite of the smallness of his pay, the officer is burdened on every hand with expenses for mess, band, regimental clubs, servants, and social items.

The changes in uniform absorb an abnormal amount of his pay. First it is a new undress, then a new full-dress alteration, a change in headgear or overcoat, a new pattern sword, or field service dress.

At Sandhurst recently the cadets had changes of headdress involving the possession by each cadet of no fewer than five caps, none of which is of any use after passing to a regiment. The cost of altering cadet kit to regimental pattern involves an outlay of from £20 to £30.

Craig-y-Nos Again for Sale.

From The London Mail.

Another attempt is to be made to sell Craig-y-Nos, the beautiful Welsh palace belonging to Mme. Patti, (Baroness Cederstrom,) the world-famous singer. The announcement is made that it is to be sold at a price regardless of "cost or associations."

The first attempt to dispose of Craig-y-Nos proved a fiasco, as the result of a remarkable incident. On June 17, 1901, the estate was put up by Messrs. Lumley, of Tokenhouse Yard, and one gentleman present bid £50,000.

On second thoughts, however, he withdrew it after a consultation with the auctioneer, explaining that he had been carried away by that official's eloquence. The estate was eventually bought in at £50,000.

Craig-y-Nos is magnificently situated in the vale of Tawe, one of the most picturesque parts of Wales. It contains a theatre, an electrically heated conservatory, and two billiard rooms, in one of which is the famous orchestrion which plays an indefinite number of tunes.

HEAD OF ROTHSCHILDS' PARIS HOUSE IS DEAD

Baron Alphonse Unexpectedly Succumbs to Bronchitis.

RECENTLY GAVE $2,000,000

Attempt Was Made to Kill Him in 1895 and He Frequently Received Threatening Letters.

PARIS, May 26.—Baron Alphonse de Rothschild, head of the French branch of the famous banking house and Governor of the Bank of France, died at 4:30 o'clock this morning from acute bronchitis aggravated by gout.

The eminent financier had been sinking slowly for many days, but there was no apprehension that his death was imminent. He first took to his bed two weeks ago. Several rallies gave promise of his recovery. Two days ago, however, the Baron began to fail rapidly and his condition became disquieting. Although he kept up animated conversation with members of his family and his old servants the patient became very weak. Last night he entered upon a comatose state and he passed away this morning peacefully, surrounded by his family.

The announcement of the Baron's death caused widespread regret, for besides his position in the financial world Baron Alphonse was known for his lavish charities, one of the latest being a gift of $2,000,000 for the erection of workingmen's homes.

The news of the Baron's death caused a deep impression among financiers. It was said that his death would probably momentarily influence the extensive interests in which the house is concerned, but that it would not have a lasting effect on the markets.

Baron Alphonse will be succeeded as head of the Paris banking house by Baron Lambert de Rothschild of Brussels, whose business capacity has earned him a world-wide reputation.

The burial of Baron Alphonse will be most simple, according to the strict rule of the Rothschild family. The coffin will be a plain one, and there will be no mourning tributes. The funeral, the date of which has not yet been fixed, will, however, be the occasion of notable tributes of respect.

President Loubet, Premier Rouvier, and many officials, financiers, and diplomats called at the Rothschild residence to-day to express their condolences with the family.

A member of a French-American banking house said:

"Baron Alphonse was the leading spirit of the Rothschilds in their relations with practically all the Governments of Europe. Besides the colossal task of financing the indemnity which France paid to Germany after the Franco-German war of 1870-71 he actively carried on relations with other Governments. In Italy these included both the Government and the Vatican finances. The house also has large interests in Spain and largely controls Austria's railroad developments. It held considerable parts of all the old Russian loan issues, but has not exercised a controlling influence in the new Russian loans.

"The large industrial interests of the house in Russia include the petroleum fields of Baku. The house has also had considerable dealings in American securities through the Belmonts, J. Pierpont Morgan, and John W. Gates, including Louisville and Nashville and the Atlantic Coast Line transactions. It also has extensive interests in mines in California."

A CULTURED, CAREWORN MAN.

His Fortune a Heavy Burden to Baron Alphonse.

Baron Alphonse de Rothschild was a man of great culture as well as a worthy representative of his family as a financier. He was also interested in sports, particularly racing.

There have been two attacks upon the French Rothschilds. The first was in 1848, when the father of Baron Alphonse, being besieged by peasant Socialists, received them and offered to give his visitors what was due should he divide his fortune among the people. He calculated that they should receive 5 francs each. The peasants left the old Baron in peace.

The second attack was upon Baron Alphonse. It took a more cowardly form. In September, 1895, a letter was sent to him containing an explosive that would go off when the letter was opened. The Baron was at the seaside, and the letter was opened by a clerk, a Polish Jew, M. Jodkowitz. He was thrown down by the detonation, but not seriously injured. Curiously enough, M. Jodkowitz was at the time in charge of Baron Alphonse de Rothschild's charitable disbursements, which benefited the deserving of all faiths.

Notwithstanding all his wealth and influence, Baron Alphonse was an unhappy man. He found pleasure in his family life, in art, and in music, but the care of his great fortune was a heavy burden. A visitor once found the banker in such a moody fit that he asked if he were ill.

"I am not ill; I am crazy," was the reply.

"I will never believe that you are crazy until I see you throwing your money out of the window," said the visitor.

"Ah!" said the Baron, exhibiting a threatening letter, "I am crazy because I do not throw my money out of the window."

The Baron had one strong superstition, which he could not overcome, and that was that the number 13 was unlucky. When he was married he chose as his residence the hotel in the Rue St. George which had been the property of M. Pescatore. The residence bore the number 13. When the Baron saw the number he refused to enter the house until it was removed. When letters came addressed with the old number he refused to open them, and he offered 15,000f. to the municipality to be distributed among the poor, if the number were changed. The offer was accepted and "11 bis" was substituted.

The Baron lost an eye in 1893 while on a hunting expedition, through the carelessness of one of his guests. Being a strikingly handsome man, he felt the disfigurement keenly, and said he would rather have had the top of his head blown at by the Baron's friends as a fiction of the overimaginative.

Baron Alphonse had been so frequently threatened with death that he never appeared in public without a guard of armed detectives. After the receipt of the letter which exploded in the hands of a clerk he gave out an interview denouncing labor organizations. At the time he had received many anonymous letters purporting to come from them. Following is his description of the relations between capital and labor:

"Only the idle good-for-nothings desire the eight-hour day. Serious men, fathers of families, work as long as they think necessary for their own and their children's needs. There is much loose talk nowadays about the danger of so much capital in the hands of a few men. This is all rubbish. Some men are richer; others are poorer. To-morrow this is all changed by vicissitudes which nobody can control. It is the money which circulates that fructifies, and money circulates with the same risk to all. It is money which one lends in confidence for so-called good things which does not always turn out well. All that applies to the great as well as to the small investors.

"Frighten capital, and it vanishes. Capital is like water. Grasp it violently and it slips through your fingers; treat it gently, dig a canal in which to lead it, and it runs wherever you will. Capital is a country's fortune. It represents the energy, thrift, and labor of the people. Capital is labor. Apart from unhappy exceptions, which seem to be unavoidable, each shares in the people's capital according to his intelligence, energy, and work accomplished."

Baron Alphonse was born Feb. 1, 1827. He was a member of the Academy of Fine Arts, a member of the French Institute, and a Commander of the Legion of Honor. He leaves two children, Baron Edouard and Baroness Beatrix. He has two surviving brothers, Baron Gustav and Baron Edmond. Baron Gustav has a son, Robert, and two daughters, one of whom married Sir Edward Sassoon, a great friend of King Edward, while the other married Baron Lambert de Rothschild of Brussels, who succeeds Baron Alphonse as head of the Paris banking house.

It is estimated that with the other heads of the family Baron Alphonse de Rothschild had at the time of his death $60,000,000 invested in American securities. The Belmonts have been the Rothschilds' American agents for many years, although Morton, Bliss & Co. have also done a good deal of their American business. The Rothschilds' American investments include large holdings of railroad stocks and bonds, and breweries in Rochester, St. Louis, and Cincinnati.

BLACKBURN DECLINES.

Won't Speak at Grant's Tomb—Will Thus Avoid Criticism.

Fearing that to be present would subject him to criticism at home and embarrass him politically, United States Senator Joseph C. S. Blackburn of Kentucky has written to Grant Post, Brooklyn, asking at the eleventh hour to be excused from taking part in the Memorial Day exercises at Grant's Tomb and delivering an address as he had promised to do.

Grant Post appears to be meeting with but little success in its efforts to have ex-Confederates join in the Memorial Day ceremonies here. It extended an invitation to the New York Camp of the Confederate Veterans to march with it in the parade in Brooklyn. The invitation was accepted. Then some of the Brooklyn veterans objected to marching behind men whom they had fought. The New York camp tactfully withdrew. This action by the New York camp apparently had some influence upon Senator Blackburn.

"I have been so troubled in my effort to decide as to what should be my proper action," he writes, "that I have invoked the calm judgment of my closest and wisest friends. They, after mature deliberation, have advised that I should take the action of which I now apprise you. They think the action of the Confederate camp tends to make the situation too delicate and doubtful to justify me in filling the engagement, and might perhaps subject me to criticism here at the hands of our organization because I did not conform or accord sufficient consideration to the course adopted by the Confederate camp of your city."

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

To-day's principal town wedding will be that of Miss Honor Ellsworth Barr and John Sheafe Douglas. Miss Barr is the elder daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William R. Barr of West Fifty-sixth Street, and a niece of the late Paul Leicester Ford. Mr. Douglas is a son of Mrs. Mary Sheafe Douglas. Because of a death in her family, Miss Hildegarde Turle, a cousin of Miss Barr, who was to have been a bridesmaid, has retired, and her place will be filled by Miss Rosalie Gardiner Jones. The other bridesmaids are to be Miss Lucie Mayo-Smith, Miss Hilda H. Goodwin, Miss Grace Quackenbush, Miss Maria Sheafe Douglas, and Miss Helena Rutherfurd Ely. Miss Gillian Barr will be her sister's maid of honor. Frederick Douglas will be John Sheafe Douglas's best man, and the ushers will be Reginald Jevons, Horatio Krans, Louis C. Berrian, and Washington Brauns.

JUSTICE VAN BRUNT DIES AT ENTRANCE TO BRIDGE

FELL AND SPOKE NO MORE

Courts Adjourn Immediately on Receipt of News and Justices Hasten to Offer Aid and Sympathy.

Charles H. Van Brunt, Presiding Justice of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, and one of the most eminent jurists of this country, died suddenly at 1:45 yesterday afternoon at the Manhattan entrance to the Brooklyn Bridge. His death was due to heart disease.

Justice Van Brunt was on his way to Brooklyn, accompanied by his daughter, Georgie, who was leaning on his arm. They had hurriedly ascended the stairway leading from Park Row to the first gallery above the Bridge esplanade, on their way to a Brooklyn elevated train, when Justice Van Brunt stopped abruptly, clutched at his heart, and sank to the pavement, unconscious.

Miss Van Brunt in an instant was on her knees beside her father. She lifted his head and urged him to speak, but there came no response. A policeman called an ambulance from the Hudson Street Hospital, while another brought a stimulant and others again tried to restore respiration. But Justice Van Brunt never spoke again, and when Dr. Long arrived he was dead.

Policemen then placed the form of Justice Van Brunt on a stretcher and carried it to the emergency hospital, which is situated beyond the furthest bridge loop. A great crowd followed. Miss Van Brunt did not know that her father was dead until the ambulance surgeon asked her if she wished to notify anybody.

"Oh, no," she replied, "not unless my father should die. Then I would like to wire my mother, who is on her way to Rochester."

"I am sorry," said the surgeon; "I think you had better wire."

News of Justice Van Brunt's death in the meantime had been carried to the County Court House. Justice O'Gorman, who was calling the calender in Part III., after expressing his sorrow adjourned court, as a mark of respect, and hastened to take charge of the body. Justices Leventritt, Giegerich, and Davis, who still were sitting, followed his example as soon as they learned the news.

The body remained for more than an hour at the emergency hospital before it could be removed to the Van Brunt residence, at 10 East Forty-sixth Street.

JUSTICES WILL MEET TO-DAY.

Of Justice Van Brunt's associates on the Appellate Division bench, Justices O'Brien and Hatch called at the Emergency Hospital as soon as they heard of the death of their colleague. Justice Patterson of the Appellate Division was too much affected by the sudden death to go with them. The Appellate Division has already adjourned for the term, but the Justices will hold a special session to-day to take suitable action on the death of their Presiding Justice. Justices Truax, McCall, Bischoff, and Dowling of the Supreme Court and Judge Seabury and Judge Delehanty of the City Court also hastened to the hospital, as did many clerks and attendants from the County Court House.

At the residence of Justice Van Brunt it was said that the Justice and his daughter had left home shortly before 1 o'clock. As was his custom, Justice Van Brunt visited the office of the Windsor Trust Company, of which he was President, at Forty-seventh Street and Fifth Avenue. He was accompanied by his daughter, and they remained there for two hours while Justice Van Brunt transacted business at his desk. Officials and employes of the company said he had never appeared in better health.

Justice Van Brunt's career has been wholly within the sphere of the law. He had been thirty-six years on the bench, and twenty-two of these as a Supreme Court Justice. He had been greatly honored by members of his profession, who respected him for his ability and impartiality. He instituted many reforms in court methods. His decisons were frequently cited.

Justice Van Brunt was sixty-nine years old. He would have retired from the bench on Jan. 1 next. He was born in an old Colonial mansion at Fort Hamilton on Dec. 26, 1836. His ancestors were among the early Dutch settlers in that section of Long Island. He was graduated from the University of the City of New York in the class of 1856, and was admitted to the bar in 1860. His first practice was gained with the firm of Leonard & Hoffman, of which the latter member became a Governor of this State. For a time he was counsel to the City Chamberlain.

BECAME A JUDGE IN 1869.

In 1869 he was elected a Judge of the Court of Common Pleas in this city. He held this position until 1883, when he was elected a Justice of the Supreme Court, in which tribunal he had served by appointment for the larger portion of the fourteen years he was a Judge of the lower court. In 1895 he was appointed Presiding Justice of the Appellate Division by Gov. Morton. Two years later he was renominated for Justice of the Appellate Division and elected by all the political parties.

Two years ago Justice Van Brunt accepted the Presidency of the Windsor Trust Company. He met attacks made on him at that time by declaring that the position was honorary, and that he would not take up the active duties connected with it until after his retirement from the bench.

In 1874 he married Miss Jennie E. Bull of Rochester, who survives him. His only son, Arthur H., is a practicing lawyer in this city. He had two daughters, one of whom is Mrs. Andreas of Englewood, N. J. The other daughter, who is unmarried, was with him when he died.

Justice Van Brunt was a member of the Manhattan, the Lotos, and the New York Yacht Club, the St. Nicholas Society, the Aldine Association, the Liederkranz Society, the American Museum of Natural History, and the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

GOVERNOR TO FILL VACANCY.

Politicians Think Justice Clarke Probably Will Be Chosen.

The vacancy created in the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court by the death of Justice Van Brunt will be filled by Gov. Higgins. The Governor may name Justice Ingraham, whose term expires soon. Justice Ingraham, while elected as a Democrat, has not been active as a partisan.

Politicians argued yesterday, however, that a new man would have to be selected for the Appellate Division bench, and that

DECIDES FOR MRS. TOWNSEND.

Newport Residence Established—Court Will Grant Divorce.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, May 26.—In the Supreme Court to-day Mrs. Pauline Onativia Townsend got a favorable decision in her suit for divorce from John R. Townsend, with the custody of her child. The case was heard earlier in the week, but Judge Bledgett reserved his decision until legal residence was more satisfactorily established. Evidence satisfactory to the court was presented to-day to show that Mrs. Townsend had resided here for more than two years.

The divorce will not be finally granted until after the six months required by law.

Mrs. Townsend was Miss Pauline Onativia before her marriage to Mr. Townsend in the eighties. She is a sister of Luisito Onativia, who is now living in England, and who has been married three times and divorced twice. The Townsends for several years held a conspicuous place among the smart set at Westchester. Mrs. Townsend has spent the Summers at Newport. Mrs. Townsend filed her suit for divorce last April. She is a cousin of Mrs. T. Suffern Tailer and of Mrs. H. L. Burnett.

WEDDINGS OF A DAY.

TEW—SCOTT.

The wedding was celebrated at 4:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon in Trinity Chapel of Miss Eleanor Attwood Scott, elder daughter of Justice Francis M. Scott and Mrs. Scott, and William Henry Tew, formerly of Jamestown, N. Y., but now of Glasgow, Scotland.

The chapel was simply decorated with green trees massed around the chancel, and the officiating clergyman was the Rev. Frederick G. Scott, rector of St. Matthew's Church, Quebec, who is a cousin of the bride. The chapel was well filled, as about a thousand invitations were issued for the wedding. The six bridesmaids and the matron of honor entered from the side doors near the chancel and walked down the nave to meet the bride and her maid of honor. The matron was Mrs. Frank Dresser of Worcester, Mass., who was in white crêpe de chine and lace topped by a large bluish-green hat, and the bridesmaids were the Misses Elizabeth and Dorothy Hurry, Betty Collamore, Marie L. Wickes, Julia Dawson, and Miriam E. Gross. They were in green liberty crêpe frocks topped by large green hats, all the hats being trimmed with white roses and having long tulle scarf strings. Miss Margaret Simes Scott, the maid of honor, wore an all-white mull frock with lace trimmings and carried white daisies. Her hat was like those of the other attendants. The procession moved up the nave to the altar with the ushers leading. They were John D. Kilpatrick, Clifford Buckingham, and T. Sutherland Scott, a brother of the bride, all of New York, and Frank L. Warren, Jr., of Stockbridge, Mass., Charles C. Egbert of Niagara, Canada, Ralph Whiting of Boston, Alfred J. Brandt of Holland, and Charles Carpenter of Berlin. The bride's gown was a princess robe of heavy white satin with a long, round train; it was trimmed with point lace down the front and had a point lace yoke and lace frills to the puffed elbow sleeves. She carried a mound bouquet of gardenias bordered with a point d'Alencon ruffle, and her long tulle veil was caught to her coiffure in puffs with orange blossoms, a part of the veiling being brought over the face. Mr. Tew's best man was his brother, James Dinsmore Tew.

A reception for relatives and a few intimate friends at the Scott residence, 42 Park Avenue, followed the church ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Tew will live in Glasgow.

SAYS JEALOUS ARTISTS ATTACKED BIONDI GROUP

Counsel for Sculptor Defends Character of "The Saturnalia."

IS NOW IN MUSEUM BASEMENT

$200,000 Damages Asked for Failure to Exhibit It and Alleged Breach of Contract.

The trial of the action brought by Ernesto Biondi against the Metropolitan Museum of Art brought all of the Directors of the Museum with the exception of Whitelaw Reid to the Special Term, Part III. of the Supreme Court, yesterday. Elihu Root appeared as special counsel for the Museum, while Gilbert R. Hawes represented the sculptor, who asserts that his artistic reputation has been injured by the refusal of the Museum to carry out an alleged contract to exhibit his group entitled "The Saturnalia," which the sculptor says represents the dawn of Christianity and the decay of the older order of things. The statue is now boxed up in the basement of the Museum.

When Justice Leventritt went on the bench many well-known artists were in court anxious to hear the story of how "The Saturnalia" met a dusty fate. Biondi believes that he has been damaged to the extent of $200,000 by reason of the failure to exhibit his group at the Museum, and asks the court to hold that the statue is held in trust for him.

In answering, the Museum denied all Biondi's allegations, and, as a special defense, alleges that if any contract was made it was entered into by the late Gen. di Cesnola, who was Curator of the Museum, and who, the Museum authorities say, had no authority to enter into such a contract.

Mr. Hawes described his client as one of the most famous sculptors in the world. "The Saturnalia," he said, had taken first prize at the Paris Exhibition in 1900, and had gained for Biondi the order of the Legion of Honor. The group had been exhibited at the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo, where it was viewed by thousands, who, Mr. Hawes said, did not consider it indecent. The Metropolitan Museum of Art, through Gen. Cesnola, asked for permission to place it on exhibition here for a year, and a contract was then entered to, said Mr. Hawes, by which it was to be exhibited in the east wing of the Museum. The east wing of the Museum was not completed when the statue arrived, and it was found necessary to do something to the customs duty in the six months' time limit for exhibiting it had expired. The Museum, counsel for Biondi said, furnished to the Government a penalty bond binding itself to pay $18,500 if the statue was exhibited for a year. This bond counsel said was not given by Gen. Cesnola, but by the Museum, and the group was then exhibited privately, but shortly afterward a meeting of the Board of Directors was called.

"In the meantime," said Mr. Hawes, "a coterie of jealous American artists held a meeting and protested that the group was indecent. The wives of some of the Directors were opposed to the group as immodest, and, acting upon their complaints the Board of Directors refused to continue the exhibition. Thereupon the group was forthwithwith sent apart and thrown into the cellar of the Museum, where it still remains, in violation of the contract."

Counsel added that the Museum did not even return "The Saturnalia," and refused to do so unless Biondi paid over the $18,500 bond.

Justice Leventritt remarked that according to the argument of counsel the question seemed to demand a suit at law for damages. Mr. Hawes replied that all he wanted to prove now was that the documents which he would submit to the court would show conclusively that a binding contract existed between the Museum and Biondi. After proving this he said he would ask for a jury to assess damages.

A large batch of correspondence which passed between the late Gen. Cesnola and Biondi, and which made reference to exhibiting "The Saturnalia" at the Museum, was introduced in evidence. The correspondence which resulted in the giving of a bond by the Museum to the Government was also introduced.

The trial will be continued on Monday.

Forbids Clinic for Consumptives.

After hearing argument by counsel yesterday in the Supreme Court, Brooklyn, Justice Marean continued an order restraining the Department of Health from establishing a clinic for consumptives at 75 Henry Street, that borough. The proceedings were brought by Mrs. Barbara Schloerb, acting for herself and other residents of the Heights. It was claimed that the clinic would lower property values and be a source of danger to the health of the neighborhood.

MR. FISH MUST PAY FOR FURS SENT TO WIFE

Jury's Verdict—Experts Declare She Got a Bargain for $1,600.

HE GETS $150,000 A YEAR

But Is Not in Habit of Paying Wife's Bills, Illinois Central President Testifies in Suit.

Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish appeared as a witness yesterday in an action brought against her husband by Adelbert Jaeckel, a dealer in furs, who sued Mr. Fish for $1,000, the price of a Russian sable muff and tippet, which Mrs. Fish ordered. The case was tried before Judge Delehanty in Part I. of the City Court. The jury decided that Mr. Fish owed the furrier the amount Jaeckel claimed.

It was Jaeckel's contention that after Mrs. Fish had looked over many skins she chose eight, which were used to make the muff and tippet, and that later Mrs. Fish had returned them, saying that the skins she had selected were not used and that others which had been dyed were substituted. The jury concluded that Mrs. Fish was mistaken, and rendered a judgment against her husband for the $1,600.

Mrs. Fish and Mr. Fish, who also was in court, seemed extremely bored with the length of the proceedings, the taking of testimony occupying all of the morning session of the court and a part of the afternoon. The first witness was Frank Byrne, who sold the skins to Mrs. Fish. He described at great length Mrs. Fish's care in selection and her return of the muff and tippet, declaring that Mrs. Fish was in error when she thought that the fur in the manufactured article was not the same that she had chosen. Seven employes of the furrier testified to the making of the muff and tippet from the skins selected by Mrs. Fish. Two experts declared that Mrs. Fish had made a great mistake, as she had struck a good bargain with the furrier. They said that the goods would sell anywhere for $2,000.

Mr. Fish was called to the stand to be examined as to whether he was financially able to pay the debt contracted by his wife. Mr. Fish was not inclined to be amused. When he was asked what was his salary as President of the Illinois Central Railroad he declined to answer.

After a little row among the lawyers Judge Delehanty ruled that questions as to Mr. Fish's financial ability to pay his wife's debts were admissible. Mr. Fish then acknowledged that his annual income was $150,000.

"You are in the habit of paying bills incurred by your wife, are you not?" he was asked.

"When she buys things for the house I pay the bills," said Mr. Fish. "Otherwise she pays the bills herself."

"Do you mean to say that you have never paid for your wife's clothing?"

"Never."

"But you give her an allowance, don't you?"

"I supplement her income. She has large means of her own. But I always give her presents on Christmas and her birthday."

Mrs. Fish, when called to the stand after recess, was asked if she was the wife of Stuyvesant Fish.

"I believe I am," was the reply.

"You are his wife?" continued counsel, who wanted to have the records straight.

"I think so," answered Mrs. Fish, with some spirit.

Mrs. Fish said that the furs had arrived one Saturday night when she was out, and that she did not open them until Sunday morning, when she found that "the muff was very ugly." In answer to a question she denied that she had ever worn them. She had shown them to friends, who agreed that they were ugly, and had telephoned the furrier that she could not possibly accept them. She sent them back and called on the furrier to explain that they were not what she had bargained for.

The jury was out only five minutes before it returned with its verdict.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Collectors May Not Withhold Papers from the Board of Appraisers.

In a decision written by Judge Somerville, the Board of United States General Appraisers yesterday promulgated the principle that Collectors of Customs have no legal right to withhold from the board invoices and other official papers in instances where importers have appealed from assessments imposed by the Collector. The specific case before the customs tribunal stood in the name of Aldo Bolognesi of New York, but the issues involved are of general interest. Judge Somerville was also called upon in this protest to decide whether the ten days allowed to importers by law to file appeals from decisions of Collectors include Sundays or not. The General Appraiser reaches the conclusion that Congress intended that the ten days shall include Sunday, and not exclude that day as maintained by the importer. The fact that a law of the State of New York excludes Sunday from that period in which an act is authorized or required to be done has no effect, Judge Somerville holds, in instances where a Federal law to the contrary governs.

Claims overruled yesterday were by W. G. Walz, El Paso, Texas; the George B. Peck Dry Goods Company, Kansas City, Mo.; P. McGettrick, Burlington, Vt.; Hughes Fulweett and others, New York; Bradner Smith & Co., G. W. Sheldon & Co., Chicago; J. Cusimano and others, New Orleans; Moses Norris, Baltimore; I. Kogabyashi, Honolulu; the J. Spencer Turner Company, Pa.; Tuskit, Morimura Brothers, L. & E. Stirn, Douglas & Berg, John McCann & Co. and others, E. H. Schwietering & Co., New York.

The board sustained claims filed by Unger Brothers, Newark; Otero & Sobrino, F. Siraguas & Co., San Juan; C. F. Rumpp & Sons, B. Wilmsen, Philadelphia; B. Ihlfelder & Co., the C. Wilderman Company, F. Pustet & Co., George Borgfeldt & Co., L. W. Levy & Co., P. F. Downing & Co., Mills & Gibb, J. R. Not Affected by Rate Agitation.

The most conservative investors in the community are now buying good mining stocks instead of railway shares. Mining does not depend on public franchises, and its profits cannot be taken away by adverse legislation. The more railroads are restricted by law as to their rates, the more profit for the mining companies, for miners furnish large amounts of freight, and the cheaper the freights the better for the miners.

President Roosevelt's policy makes for profit for the mining company as much as it makes for peril for the railroad company.

Many of the most experienced and successful investors of the country are now buying the stock of the GEORGE A. TREADWELL MINING COMPANY and believe it to be the best investment on the market to-day. The Company owns by far the largest property in one of the richest mining districts of the world—the Verde Copper Belt in Yavapai County, Arizona. Its property is several times as large as that of its near neighbor, the United Verde, and it seems to be in every way just as rich. The Company has spent nearly a million dollars in the development and equipment of this property, and uncovered ore bodies enough to last longer than any of us will last, and rich enough to pay dividends equal to those paid by the oldest and most successful producers of the country.

Its recently completed smelting plant is now running successfully and profitably, and the profits it is earning will be distributed among the stockholders in dividends a little later.

The stock is steadily advancing in price as the investing community come to appreciate more and more the merits of the enterprise.

To provide increased capital for its increased business, and to keep up its record of paying as it goes, the Company has recently increased its stock from 300,000 to 350,000 shares, of the par value of $10 a share, and a limited amount of the new stock is now offered for subscription at $11 a share.

U. S. Rubber Capital Increased.

TRENTON, May 26.—The United States Rubber Company filed a certificate in the Secretary of State's office here today increasing the company's capital stock from $50,000,000 to $75,000,000. Of this, $40,000,000 is preferred stock, $10,000,000 is second preferred stock, and $25,000,000 is common stock. The reason for the increase is stated to be the acquisition of the business of the Boston Rubber Shoe Company, which was recently purchased by the United States Rubber Company.

THE EQUITABLE TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK

PENNSYLVANIA FUNDS HERE.

Large Part of Proceeds of Railroad's Recent Bond Sale to Remain in New York.

A large proportion of the money recently paid to the Pennsylvania Railroad by the bankers who took over most of the road's recent issue of $100,000,000 of convertible bonds, it was learned yesterday, will remain on deposit in New York for some time. It is said that the funds have been deposited here mostly with trust companies, with the understanding that it shall be undisturbed for a period of several months. Three per cent. was the rate that the trust companies were reported to be paying on these deposits. This is the present market rate for thirty and sixty day money, so that there would be no profit in the transaction unless the funds could be loaned out at least for ninety days. Of the total issue of $100,000,000 only about $10,000,000 were taken by the stockholders, leaving about $90,000,000 which went to the bankers who underwrote the issue. Half the issue price was payable this month and half at the end of September, but it is understood that some of the bankers who took the bonds elected to pay for them in full, so that the Pennsylvania Railroad has already received in excess of $50,000,000.

CAR LINE CHANGES HANDS.

Springfield's System Under Direction of New Haven Railroad Interests.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., May 26.—In a meeting of the stockholders of the Springfield Street Railway Company this afternoon the control of the road was formally handed over to the New Haven interests.

The old Board of Directors resigned and A. W. Damon, acting President of the company, and Treasurer Frederick Harris were re-elected Directors. All of the new Directors belonging to the Directorate of the New York and New Haven Road.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, May 26.—Money was in good demand in the market to-day, partly in connection with calls for over $5,000,000. Supplies were plentiful. Discounts were firm.

On the Stock Exchange trading was mostly dormant and featureless, stocks having a drooping tendency. Consols were easier.

Americans opened flat owing to the reaction in Wall Street and recovered to a fraction above parity in the forenoon owing to fair support, prompted by the reports of a better feeling among the members of the Hill-Harriman parties. Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé led the improvement on bear covering. Later there was some reaction, then prices remained fairly steady for a while, became very unsettled, rallied during the last hour, and closed firmer.

Japanese were firmer. Imperial Japanese 4 per cent. of 1904 were quoted at 101½. Russians and Rio Tintos were easier on Continental selling.

Money, 1¼@1½ per cent.

The rate of discount in the open market for short bills is 2⅛ per cent.; three months' bills, 2¼ per cent.

Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Madrid, 31.72; Lisbon, 8.50.

The amount of bullion taken into the Bank of England on balance to-day was £20,000.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, May 26.—The local money market is very dull and easy. The usual table of rates follows:

Call loans, 3@3½ per cent.; time loans, collateral, 3¼@3¾ per cent.; time loans, mercantile paper, 3¾@4 per cent.; Clearing House loans, 2½ per cent.; New York funds, par@5 cents premium. Clearings, $22,280,221; balances, $1,730,630. Sub-Treasury debit, $61,375.

Midsummer dullness with a tone anything but satisfactory to the bull faction is the condition of the market to-day. Stocks were in good supply and a scarcity of bidders was found. Commission houses report an increased supply of selling orders and few buying orders making their appearance. Traders are neglecting local issues and trading in the New York stocks that are active on our local Exchange. The only feature among the copper shares was Greene Consolidated, which appeared in good supply throughout the day, while late in the day United States Mining and Calumet were both heavy.

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Strength in Ontario Almost the Only Feature of a Market No Longer Effervescent.

There was a marked decline in intelligence, interest, and business upon the Stock Exchange yesterday. After a surplus of welcome but unappreciated news the average was restored by a deficiency of price-moving developments. The death of Baron Alphonse de Rothschild produced little effect even in Paris, and here had only personal significance, despite the leading position of his local correspondents. Such contingencies are nowadays carefully protected against the disturbing effects which they once possessed. In the iron market there were reports of larger consumption in the West, and higher prices in the South, confirming the previous impression that the situation was sound. The report of Mr. Harriman's relinquishment of some of his official responsibilities in connection with the Union Pacific system, or rather, perhaps, his preference of other channels for his activities, has the appearance of retaining all his control of his own properties, and removing any remnant of friction in personal relations between them and their neighbors. It takes two to make a quarrel, and Mr. Harriman leaves the maintenance of the ameliorated relations to others. Wheat, corn, and cotton were all yielding. The collapse in corn—down 14c in two days—is purely speculative, and the fall in cotton also is due, not to crop considerations, but to announcement of a changed market position by the leading bull. Not the quantity of cotton grown, but the quantity bought or sold, is what controls markets like the present, and the remark has application to the stock market as well. Forecasts of to-morrow's bank statement report a gain of cash and a probable increase of surplus, dependent upon the vagaries of the loan and deposit items. The call upon the Pennsylvania underwriters last week has not yet expended its force, and this week the disturbing factor is the Japanese loan payment. The money market remains perfectly placid under operations of the first magnitude, and the sterling market was soft under an ample supply of bills.

The day's price movement is hardly worth analysis. There was a shrinkage of business hour by hour, except some small increase toward the end. The chief exception was Ontario, which was both active and strong, ostensibly upon further reports of dividend expectations, but some thought rather upon concentration of buying for market effect. In the bond market Burlington 4s showed the effect of increasing belief in the probability of retirement, with profit to present holders.

CONDITIONS OF TRADE.

Concerning the general trade situation Dun's Review says:

Improvement is reported in retail trade, although weather conditions are still far from ideal, and excessive rain retards agricultural progress sufficiently to cause conservatism among dealers; yet confidence in the future is the prevailing sentiment, and leading dry goods jobbers are unanimous in anticipating a large Fall trade. Manufacturing plants are busy, especially in heavy steel lines, except where usual repairs are being made or seasonable closing is necessitated. Shoe factories find difficulty in starting work on Fall footwear, owing to numerous supplementary Spring orders, and there is little idle machinery in textile lines, which feel the impetus of advancing raw materials. Building operations make favorable comparisons with recent years, and there is little controversy regarding wages or hours of labor.

In the iron and steel industry there is great activity on old orders, and general confidence in a vigorous demand during the second half of the year, but current buying is extremely light, except in a few departments. Hence, the mills and furnaces are more active than the markets just now, which explains the apparent contradiction of reports.

Bradstreet's says:

Wholesale trade is seasonably quiet pending a clearer view of crop out-turn, which, owing to irregular or unsettled weather in wide areas, still lacks definite form. Cool weather is still a bar to fullest activity at retail. Manufacturing activity is still in large volume on orders previously booked. Speculative markets for wheat reflect technical conditions and short supplies in primary markets more clearly than they do the slight deterioration in quantity and quality indicated as resulting from recent backward weather, which has also been used as a lever to affect corn and cotton. Collections reflect little more than a seasonable slowness, and money is easy and in abundant supply.

Diverse conditions rule in two great divisions of the textile trades. The cotton trade, after two years of depression and unsettlement, due to irregular or very high prices, is experiencing a revival. Woolen goods, on the other hand, are beginning to feel the influence of the great advance in raw material, and while popular lines of goods are selling well, others find the margin of profit between the raw and finished material a narrow one. Higher prices for woolens seem assured if the present prices for raw material hold, but pending a firm establishment on the new basis, irregularity is looked for.

Bank clearings for the week ending with May 25 aggregate $2,674,173,199, a fraction of 1 per cent. over last week, and 47 per cent. in excess of last year. Exchanges outside New York City total $900,927,295, 3 per cent. less than last week, but 28 per cent. over last year.

IMPORTS OF DRY GOODS.

Imports of dry goods at the Port of New York for the week were valued at $1,924,760, as against $2,078,426 for the previous week and $2,029,303 for the corresponding week last year. The value of the amount marketed was $1,901,941, as against $2,065,203 for the previous week and $1,944,802 for the corresponding week last year.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Stagnation Rules Market—Wall Street Men Going Abroad.

Stagnation ruled the market yesterday, and the market got duller as the afternoon wore on. In the last hour only a little more than 60,000 shares were traded in. The lack of outside business was so pronounced that it forced the traders to reduce their operations, because the absence of the public, even that of a semi-professional nature, made the market narrow and therefore made it difficult either to buy or sell stocks in any quantity. Those who wanted to sell and those who wanted to buy had to make equal concessions unless they were willing to bide their time. A market order of a few hundred shares was enough to move prices a half point either way.

Sales Tickets.

The Governors of the Stock Exchange have adopted a ruling in connection with the stock transfer tax, which takes effect June 1. This ruling provides that in order to constitute a good delivery after June 1 all deliveries on sales of stocks, whether by Clearing House delivery ticket or by certificate of stock, must be accompanied by a sales ticket stamped in accordance with the act of the Legislature.

Abroad to Shun Market.

There is promise of a larger exodus of Wall Street men to Europe this Summer than there has been in some time. As one trader put it, those that have profits will take them abroad and spend them, and those that have taken losses do not care to take any more chances in a market like this, but prefer to wait for a better opportunity. It was different last Summer. Then, although the market was dull, there was a good-sized bull movement in progress by the time July had come along, and the speculators in the street were busy. At this time even the shrewdest operators seem unwilling to give any decided opinion on the market because it has been so uncertain in tone.

Whirled the Fan.

When it's dull the trader's fancy fondly turns to other games. The loyal little bands of the ticker guard that are still keeping watch in the various offices found it difficult yesterday to pass the time away, so they turned to new sensations. In one office they numbered the blades of an electric fan, each participant put up his coin and selected one number and then they turned on the power. The number that stopped nearest a given point won. The house did not charge them for either interest, electricity, wear and tear on the fan, commissions, or a "kitty."

Harriman's Resignation.

The news that E. H. Harriman would resign the Presidency of the Union Pacific had no effect to speak of. It had been known to insiders for some time that Mr. Harriman had lightened the burden of his holdings in stocks, and that he should resign the office was not considered as marking a change in the situation as it had existed for the last few months. Mr. Harriman, it is admitted even by those who have recently had occasion seriously to disagree with him, is one of the best railroad men in the country, and his advice and counsel would be of the greatest value even if he had never held the large interest in the railroads which he formerly did hold. It was asserted yesterday that his intention also to lighten the burden of office did not meet with any opposition among those who control the property.

To Call the Turn.

It is difficult to call the turning point of a market and to say that this is where the bull market begins and that is where the bear market ends. The reason is that both bulls and bears keep on trying to move the market their way long after it has really reached its climax. This is more particularly true of bear markets, because the collapse of a bull market is generally sudden and violent, while the change from a bear market to a bull market is slow and gradual. The bears continue to seek out such weak spots as may exist and to hammer them and the market, but when attacks on these weak spots are no longer accompanied by sympathetic movements in the rest of the market it is pretty nearly time to shift. Yesterday such an attack was made on the Corn Products shares, but the effect it had on the rest of the list was slight.

OBJECT TO SEABOARD PLAN.

Baltimore Committee Still Dissents—Reorganization to Proceed.

The Baltimore committee of holders of Seaboard Air Line stock has decided not to deposit its stock under the amended reorganization plan proposed by the Blair-Ryan committee, and has issued a circular reciting objections to the original plan and to the amended plan. The Baltimore committee represents some 66,000 shares of stock. Practically all of the remainder of the stock has been deposited under the reorganization plan, which contemplates the formation of a holding company for the securities of the Seaboard Air Line and its controlled roads.

It was said yesterday that the nonconsent of the Baltimore interests will not affect the reorganization, as under the holding company plan it will not be necessary to acquire the dissenting stock through appraisal proceedings, as it would have been had the first reorganization scheme been made operative.

SIELCKEN BOND PLAN.

To Refund $30,000,000 Kansas City Southern Issue.

The financial plans of the Kansas City Southern Railroad, control of which was recently taken over by the interests represented by Hermann Sielcken, contemplate, it was said yesterday, the refunding of the existing issue of 3 per cent. first mortgage bonds by an issue of 4 per cents. The present issue is for $30,000,000, and the forthcoming issue will be of a like amount, the difference in interest allowing for an exchange of the present securities that will leave some $6,000,000 of the new bonds applicable for extensions and improvements.

The extensions will give the road a better outlet to the Gulf, and are expected to pave the way for its development as one of the important trunk lines in its territory.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 26.—New York exchange was par before clearings and 5 cents premium afterward. Time and call loans, 3½@4% per cent.

Clique activity in Chicago Subway was the feature of the trading to-day. The stock opened easy at 62¾, because of the selling of 100 shares "under the rule" for Yesterday's sale, an attack was made on the Corn Products shares, but the effect it had on the rest of the list was slight.

THE OUTSIDE SECURITIES

Irregular Price Movements in Dull Market.

Northern Securities Advances, While Several Other Active Issues Decline—European Buying of Stubs.

The outside market yesterday lapsed into dullness again and only a few stocks moved much in either direction. The fluctuations were irregular, Northern Securities being the only really strong stock among those that showed activity. There was a further reaction in American Can preferred and United Copper was under pressure most of the day, which affected both issues of the stock, but particularly the preferred. Chicago Subway continued to advance, as it has done steadily for some time. It sold up to 64½ and closed at the highest. The Greene stocks were fairly active and firm. Greene Gold was helped to some extent by a statement issued in the name of the company which stated that reports to the effect that the Directors had decided to pass the next dividend on the stock were unfounded. It was said that the earnings for the past month were affected by unfavorable weather, but that this would not necessitate a passing of the dividend. In other words, the question is still an open one.

NORTHERN SECURITIES stubs were firm at about 300, although at that figure the offerings were rather large. It is said that a majority of all the stubs bought recently have been for European account.

The principal transactions reported in the outside market yesterday, with high, low, and last prices, were as follows:

MAYBE MY LAST REMARKS ABOUT EASTWOOD.
JAMAICA, N. Y. CITY.

Reason Why? Well, it is selling so rapidly, and satisfied purchasers are such good advertising agents for me that I won't need much more newspaper publicity. Still, I have some beautiful sites left. Prices are low, and terms of payment the easiest imaginable.

Now, won't you (just to satisfy yourself that the celebrity of EASTWOOD is justified as the finest residential property in the City) go down to Jamaica to look at it?

You will find beautiful macadam roads, under which are sewers, water and gas. There are also artistic cement walks and curbs, and all the marks of a high-class exclusive neighborhood.

I can sell you a just finished EASTWOOD house, too, for $5,500 and one for $5,000 that will be ready soon. Also one a little cheaper.

EAT-'EM-UP M'MANUS KILLED IN GANG FEUD

BOWERY BANDS' DEADLY WAR

Shootings and Stabbings the Outcome of Rivalry Between the Kelly and the Five Points Adherents.

"Jack" McManus, also known as "Eat-'em-up" and "The Brute," whose last employment was as "bouncer" in "Jim" Kelly's resort, "The Folly," in East Fourteenth Street, died yesterday at Bellevue Hospital. He was struck on the head Thursday night on the east side of the Bowery, at First Street, with an iron bar. "Kid" Griffo, who was "bouncer" in Paul A. Kelley's resort, "The Brighton," in Great Jones Street, was in the Coroners' Court held in $5,000 bail because he was with McManus when he was bludgeoned.

Police officials say that the killing came of a feud between what is known as the Kelley "gang," who resort to "The Brighton," and the Five Points "gang," whose headquarters is at Salter's, 12 Pell Street. Men of the stamp of McManus insist that there is no feud, but there was a sporadic outbreak of ruffianism between the Five Points faction, which is the remnant of the "Monk" Eastman gang, broken up by Capt. Stephen McDermott of the Fifth Street command, and a wing of the Kelley adherents. It appears certain that bad blood was engendered on Wednesday evening when Kelly, who conducts "The Folly," was beaten in the Bowery, near Great Jones Street. The Five Points partisans rallied for revenge with the result of one murder, that of McManus, and the shooting and stabbing of three men who are in hospitals dangerously hurt.

After the assault on "Jim" Kelly, who was not seriously hurt, Frank, or "Chick" Tricker, who is at the head of the Five Pointers, went to the Folly, and at 5 A. M. on Thursday left with a woman dancer. Patrons of the place followed them down to the Bowery, near Great Jones Street, where there was a sudden fusillade of pistol shots. Tricker was later on found wounded in the thigh, and was taken to St. Vincent's Hospital. He is seriously hurt. That day a man who was of the party that escorted Tricker and the woman turned up at the Hudson Street Hospital desperately wounded with a knife-in six places. Neither he nor Tricker would name his assailant. "Jim" Kelly was the next to suffer. Thursday night he was in First Avenue, near Fourth Street, when a man who was concealed in a doorway sneaked after him and plunged a stiletto in his back. He was taken to the Gouverneur Hospital. Soon after McManus was fatally assaulted.

When Capt. McDermott learned of this last assault he arrested Griffo and took him and two men, Robert Gale Nicholas and Leon Schwartz, who claimed to have seen the assault, to the Yorkville Court and afterward to the Coroners' office. Acting Captain Bourke of the Mercer Street command made several arrests in the case of Tricker, but so far the evidence obtained fastens the crime on no one.

Kelley is the head of the Paul A. Kelley Association, which has a membership of 3,000, and has a headquarters at 388 Bowery and branches in Harlem, the Bronx, and Jersey City. It purports to be an association to encourage athletic sports and promote social intercourse, and has a State charter. The Five Pointers Acting Captain Bourke classed as a roving gang that "worked" the east side from Fourteenth Street to "Chinatown." He was of the opinion that the assaults of Wednesday and Thursday would result in a vendetta, and he and Capt. McDermott have taken measures to act decisively should the feud crop out again.

McManus, who will be buried by the Kelley Association, was originally a prizefighter. He was "bouncer" at McGurk's "Suicide Hall," closed several years ago by the police; at "The Gotham," hard by; then owner of a resort at Coney Island, and last at the Folly.

STOPS THIRD-RAIL LAYING.

Mr. Littleton Causes Arrest of Long Island Road Foreman.

The war between Borough President Littleton of Brooklyn and the Long Island Railroad over the efforts of the company to equip its road on the surface of Atlantic Avenue with the "third" rail electric system resulted yesterday in the arrest of an employe of the company.

Mr. Littleton objects to the third rail on the surface as being dangerous. The rail has been laid on that portion of the road which is in Queens Borough, but when the company's men started to extend it into Brooklyn the police of the Liberty Avenue Station, acting under orders, arrested the foreman of the employes, Henry Barger. When arraigned in the Gates Avenue Court he was paroled for examination on Monday. The company claims that it has a right to lay the rail, as it owns the property in the street in fee.

Secretary Spendergast and other officers of the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity, yesterday inspected the electrification work on the Long Island Railroad. The department officials examined particularly the system of double-sheathing of the third rail, which, it is asserted, makes it impossible for any one to get a shock unless he gets down on his knees and sticks his hand in between the projecting boards.

DYNAMITER IS SENTENCED.

Gessner Rosseau was sentenced yesterday by Recorder Goff in General Sessions to serve not less than three and not more than four years in Sing Sing Prison for sending an infernal machine to the Cunard Line pier, consigned to the Umbria. Rosseau is also accused of attempting to blow up the statue of Frederick the Great in Washington.

"I don't think the evidence adduced was strong enough to convict me of this crime," Rosseau said to the Recorder. "I cannot appeal because I haven't the money, and I don't want to stay in the Tombs pending that appeal. The stuff in that box was not dynamite."

In passing sentence the Recorder said: "I believed you were suffering from some kind of insanity, and appointed a commission of experts to inquire into your condition, but this commission has pronounced you sane. How a man could conceive such a hellish design as you did, to send an infernal machine to a steamship pier with instructions to put it aboard a steamship is beyond me. I cannot understand it."

TOPICS OF THE WEEK.

MISS CARY'S fine, subtle, and sympathetic appreciation of Henry James as a novelist, which we are happily enabled to present to our readers this week, includes the reflection that the work of Mr. James is "elusive of labels." One may not truthfully call his novels romantic, realistic, or poetic, novels of manners or novels of incident by way of definitely classifying them. Miss Cary's conclusion is that the later work of Mr. James, which may not be read by one who runs, will "appear to the future the most important achievement in fiction of the period it so subtly reproduces." In the June number of McClure's Prof. Woodberry writes eloquently of a novelist whose work could always be definitely classified, who was enormously popular in his lifetime and whose books Prof. Woodberry says he reads "in the passing years, always with a greater admiration of his literary power, sheer creative faculty, his high strain of feeling and human truth, and his wholesomeness for the daily sympathies and moral ideas of the democracy." Scott always had something more than an "elect" or "initiated" following. Mr. James, it seems to us, has chosen to stray into literary by-paths, whither he has been attended only by a very discriminating few. We are confident that Miss Cary's delicate appraisal of his work is accurate, and that he is a great literary artist who really observes certain aspects of social life and character, and correctly reports, after his own strikingly "modern" fashion, what he sees. But his works have not yet contributed, as Prof. Woodberry says of the Waverley Novels, "to human happiness on the universal scale."

Readers of THE NEW YORK TIMES need to be told very little about Thomas Dixon, Jr.'s, newest book, "The Life Worth Living: A Personal Experience," which is published to-day. Generous excerpts from it have already appeared in our Sunday edition. It is a short book, (for Mr. Dixon,) containing only 140 pages, twelve-mo, and is illustrated with photographs taken by the author, chiefly of his tidewater Virginia home and scenes near by. It is dedicated to Jordan and Thomas, the author's "sons and comrades in the life worth living." Mr. Dixon and his family tried to live in New York and its neighborhood for eleven years, and did not like it. Then they bought a home on an arm of the Chesapeake, with 500 acres of land and a mile of seafront, and this book tells all about it in an intimate way. Folks who like Mr. Dixon's other books will like this very much, and everybody who likes to read about country life will find some valuable facts in it, and many pleasing fancies.

In commenting on McLandburgh Wilson's now famous Roosevelt quatrain in Tom Watson's Magazine we spoke of the poet as "Mr." Wilson. It seems that we should have said "Miss" Wilson, as the poet is really a lady, and her full name is Elaine McLandburgh Wilson. So we are politely informed by a magazine editor who has accepted much of her verse. One of our readers, in sending us a proposed substitute for the first couplet in the Roosevelt quatrain, mentioned the "two young ladies who call themselves McLandburgh Wilson," but we thought he was joking. Moreover, our friend the magazine editor does not intimate that Miss Wilson is twins. We protest that our error as to her sex was excusable. McLandburgh is not a feminine name. We have known a lady named George and have heard of a girl named Spottsylvania, but even those precedents did not suggest to us that the masculine looking and sounding McLandburgh might be the name of a woman. But the Elaine, of course, explains the mystery. We regret the mistake, and are glad to have been put in the way to correct it; and we hope that Miss Wilson will write many more little poems as stimulative of elevated and patriotic thought as her Roosevelt couplet. We assure her that we have received many letters commending it.

The reviewer of The London Times finds in Andrew D. White's Autobiography, which Mr. Boynton reviewed for us last week, further proof that "anecdote is the form of literature in which Americans shine most," an idea no American reader would be likely to derive from this book. Mr. White tells a few good anecdotes, to be sure, but those the English reviewer quotes are rather too familiar to American readers to suggest that the autobiographer is an adept in the anecdotal form of literature. More to the point, however, are this reviewer's reflections upon the frequently mentioned American lack of a class of professional diplomatists and Consuls. He believes that the real strength of our foreign representation "lies in such personalities as Mr. White, Mr. Hay, Mr. Angell, and many more who are able to alternate between service abroad and public or private employment at home." The weakness, on the other hand, is that most American men of a certain age "have no ideas at all beyond the transaction of business according to American methods." As for the general complaint that American representatives abroad are poorly paid, this English reviewer declares there is not an Ambassador in the world who does not think "he could double the importance of his country if he had a better residence and an 'adequate' salary."

When Rosa Thorpe wrote her famous verses entitled "Curfew Must Not Ring To-night," she had in mind the historic bells of Chertsey Parish Church. An English newspaper informs us that these bells have lately stopped ringing, as the frame of the belfry has been pronounced unsafe and must be rebuilt. There are eight bells, of which two are at least 600 years old. One of these, called the Abbey bell, sounded the curfew in the old days when the sound of the curfew [illegible]

BALZAC AND JAMES.

ELISABETH LUTHER CARY.

THE audiences who have listened this year to the lecture of Mr. Henry James on Balzac have enjoyed a peculiar privilege quite apart from their interest in the subject or the speaker. They have been taken frankly into the workroom of art; they have been addressed with the air of high comradeship, the assumption of interests and adventures in common, the confidence in the response of initiated minds, with which a painter or musician or writer addresses his fellows in the art he practices. It was a very fortunate note to strike, recalling the intimate relation between speaker and audience so seldom revived since the great "citizen of the world" gave his interrogatory lectures in the Greek gymnasia; and certainly in no other way could the layman have been made so clearly to feel the dignity, scope, and poignant interest of the art of fiction.

The lecture itself is not yet properly subject for discussion, remaining as it still does a matter of echoing remembered phrases, free from the bondage of the printed page. It is enough to say of it that it opens a wide window through which the irresponsible general reader may catch glimpses of the responsibilities attending a serious novelist, and that it forms the occasion for the attentive special reader to ask certain questions concerning contemporary fiction—what ground it covers, how rich it may be in impressions and suggestions of life, whether it is large or small in spirit, closely knit or loose in texture; whether it is filled with moral and artistic energy, or whether, like the languid angels of Perugino, it floats drowsily in space; whether it reaches the deeper issues of human existence or pauses timidly on the stout surface of the obvious; whether it has the beauty of truth or merely the prettiness of soft and shallow idealism.

For the professional critic there is a danger in the attempt to answer these questions, pertinent as they are to all works of genuine quality; a danger composed of false perspectives, restrictive limitations, short views, distorted views, blind views. The innocent reader, however, intelligently curious as to why he likes what he likes, is distinctly at an advantage; he may in his privacy make without vanity the great assumption that he is equal to the analysis; he may drive straight at it with an exhilarating freedom from diffidence, with perhaps a comforting sense of belonging to the mighty public by which the ultimate decision is made; and should he arrive at even a dim perception of the animating intention in the work upon which he has been feeding and of the extent to which mastery has been achieved in it, he is bound to be at least himself the happier for his knowledge. There is the charmed sense for him as of a pleasant secret between him and his author.

The work of Mr. James, particularly that of these later years, invites such analysis almost with insistence and by the very intricacy of its art. Elusive in more than one direction, it is nowhere more so than in its evasion of labels. Call it in any instance the novel of manners, and in the same instance it is perceived to be a record of spiritual forces; call it the novel of society and it puts on the face of pure psychology; call it realism, and a reflective imagination smiles out of it; call it poetic, and its consideration of the actual becomes fairly a rebuking element. All this in harmonious combination suggests nothing but life, and it is indeed only as a representation of life, of life on and beneath the surface, that we can with profit to ourselves discuss it. What commonly is forgotten by the careless or indifferent reader is the fact that it is modern life, that it is life studied and reproduced in the presence of the model, not in accordance with old traditions but in pursuit of a new tradition, more flexible, more inclusive, and more exacting, to which the novels of the early Victorian period with their great qualities, bear something the same relation as that borne by the novels of Thomas Hood to those of George Eliot. Twenty years ago Mr. James, writing of Daudet, reminded us [illegible] plicated as the world grows older: "We needs," he said at that time, "a more and more patient art, a closer analysis, to divide it into its parts." We have only to rush to extremes and ask ourselves how much of the truth of our century such a method as that of the "Beowulf" could convey to us to persuade ourselves that the complexity of our modern society cannot be reduced in its portraiture to broad simplicity. The art of letters, since it is neither so simple nor so formal, neither so limited nor so abstract as the art of painting, has in such portraiture a chance so extended as to make the exclusive application to it of the rules of its sister art an absurdity. The fiction of the present to be life-enhancing or even life-communicating must inevitably consist of a multitude of close observations of appearances behind which works the imaginative and constructive intelligence. So, at all events, one must infer from the large vacancy that exists for the alert reader in modern fiction from which these observations are absent, as well as from the confusion that exists where they are present without the competent co-ordinating intelligence to animate them into more than merely galvanic movement, and to unite them in a composite significance.

If the inference is not unjust it is obvious that mastery in fiction implies to-day a richer product than it implied fifty or sixty years ago. It implies more labor on the part of the analyst, a more implicit devotion, a more positive dedication to his task. It might be said that Balzac, writing more than fifty or sixty years ago, was as completely as possible dedicated to his task, but as a matter of fact he was dedicated only to a part of it. A large area of life was smothered for him by superimposed appearances, through which, with all his intellectual energy, he was unable to penetrate. His colossal edifice has empty corners and blank spaces which are against its making at every point the indefinable enchanting impression of a house that has been "lived in." With his idea, so magnificent and courageous, of a "Comédie Humaine," he left out elements of human nature so important as to leave for some successor a new field. His all-encompassing love of reality took insufficient account of the pressure of complex circumstances upon the individual soul. His divination stopped, in fact, at the door of the soul. At this door his sorcerer's rod declined to bend, and he passed on, splendidly unconscious that any region of speculation had refused him.

With the novels of Mr. James there is the excitement for the adventurous mind of entering this new field, these undiscovered regions of reality. There is also the confidence that nothing less than reality will meet us. Sincerity is the sternest of masters, and when it is of the essence of an author's work there are no lapses in fidelity to the thing seen. And if we have reality, have we also art? That is the question repeatedly asked concerning not only the work of Mr. James but the work of other analysts not so constantly guided as he by the imaginative vision. Have we composition, atmosphere, texture, organization, perspective, architectonic construction? Have we especially an artistic relation of values? Where these words are used not pedantically but with even a limited sense of their inspiriting significance they surely are not impertinent, although it may be a lively pleasure for the actual artist to get away from them in order to feel more richly and justly the very thing they represent; in order to feel as richly and justly as possible his art. It very well may be that only the actual artist, the man who has tried in one way or another to bring into being an organic product of art, can fully estimate the form and substance, color and value of an idea set forth as in such books as "The Golden Bowl," "What Maisie Knew," and "The Awkward Age." Certainly if one has grappled with any artistic medium, pigment or marble or words, and learned its power to co-operate and to betray, he would seem to be in better case than the uninitiated critic to appreciate the victory that consists in forming from imponderable elements a creature of visible character and tangible quality, a firm little figure like that of Nanda, of Maisie, or Maggie Verver, standing light and clear against a background of infinite complication in an air thick with potential issues, as delicately poised, as grandly defined as one of the lovely Umbrian Madonnas attended by the young Florence of Giorgio. An artist—if we do not let word imply too wide a hospitality—should know better than a layman the difficulty of shaping a conception in strict conformity to the great laws of art without recourse to already accepted models, and no doubt it is to artists that we must look for the most nearly adequate judgment of any work of hard-won beauty, especially any work that escapes from a classic tradition without losing the classic spirit.

For the rest of us, however, who are occupied with art only at second hand, there seems to be but one question—or one class of questions—to ask of a novel. Does it give us pleasure, does it liberate us from a narrow or hackneyed mode of thought, does it open for the mind a broader field of interest or show a new form of beauty or truth? If it does, it serves our simple purpose, which cannot reasonably be other than to get out of life as much as possible of enriching and enlarging experience. This claim for the work of Mr. James is made by the larger number of his attentive readers with a certain clear perception that if this tonic quality is present they are willing to take for granted the method that conveys it as sufficiently an artistic method. When we are asked to consider the development of the moral consciousness of such a child as Maisie in an environment which presses with the weight of vice and deception upon natural innocence and delicacy, we may require a degree of courage to face with the author the facts involved, but only the tamest of us can fail at the end to experience a thrill of exultation communicated by the lovely bursting into bloom of Maisie's tortured moral sense, and an impulse to cry bravo! to the completeness with which the actual nature of a child has been realized.

In "The Golden Bowl" we are as far as possible removed from the hackneyed development of a theme responsible in the world of literature for many failures and few successes. The contrast between Thackeray's treatment of his Becky and Balzac's treatment of his Valérie formed a part of the text of Mr. James's lecture, and if on our side we set ourselves to looking at Charlotte Stant in the light of her creator's attitude toward her, we perceive how amply his sympathy has been given, not to her errors, but to her humanity and her struggle toward escape from the final doom. A study at once so pitiless and so pitiful it would be hard to match in fiction, and its brilliancy is enhanced by the deeper tenderness, the fuller benignity with which Maggie is made the embodiment of human kindness.

It will never be said of the art of Mr. James that its lessons are those which he who runs may read—perhaps the most amazing thing about it is the fact of its appearing in an age when so many pages of print are swallowed "on the run." But there is nothing less probable than that its interest will be exhausted by the present generation; nothing more to be counted upon than that it will to the future appear the most important achievement in fiction of the period it so subtly reproduces.

A Trial for Murder.

THE ACCOMPLICE. By Frederick Trevor Hill. Pp. 328. 12mo, cloth. Harper & Brothers. $1.50.

A dramatic murder trial with a perplexing maze of testimony and a most unusual part played by the Foreman of the jury, is the theme of Mr. Hill's new novel. If he had not felt it needful to complicate the narrative with a love story, it would have gained in both unity and interest—one likes his courtroom fiction without the fron-fron of coquettish skirts. To several incidents of the trial we fancy a lawyer would take exception; but they will not disturb "the average reader" when he finds himself gripped by the fascination of mystery and of contest.

The chief faults of the book are matters of artistic finish. The character of the defendant might well have been more elaborated; her attitude toward her counsel and their future fortunes might have been, to its advantage, the culmination of the story. There are dropped threads, a feeling that things are unwisely hurried up and huddled together at the close. The book would have gained much by a careful rewriting; it is really so good that it is a pity not to have made it better. As it stands, however, it is a tale that will not disappoint any reader of his excitement and his thrill, of that joy of losing himself in a story, to bestow which is no mean mission—is, perhaps, the chief mission—of fiction.

BRYANT.

MR. BRADLEY has preserved a serviceable life of Bryant to take a place in the valuable series of "English Men of Letters." He has drawn freely on previous biographies, including the two massive volumes by Parke Godwin, the poet's son-in-law, and the other lesser works that have been devoted to him. He has found suggestions in Stedman's, Churton Collins's, and Woodberry's critical writings. On the biographical side there was, of course, nothing to add; on the critical side he has attempted to do fuller justice to Bryant's poetical work than criticism, and especially American criticism, had hitherto done. He has certainly gone about it without any illusions concerning Bryant's limitations.

It is not, on the whole, a stimulating or an enlivening book that has resulted; it does not present a vivid figure of a man with a strongly marked personality, disengaged from a luminously wrought background. This is, no doubt, largely due to the personal qualities of Bryant himself, whose sombre spirit, coldness, and aloofness have so often been noted. They are not qualities to kindle a biographer's enthusiasm, or a reader's. But his career was varied, and touched life at many points, though there was always a certain Puritanical rigidity in its course.

Whether as a country boy, making his first attempts at verse, or struggling modestly and unobtrusively through the penurious opportunities offered by Williams College or as a young lawyer in the Massachusetts hill towns, making contributions to the newly established North American Review, or as a new recruit to the literary life of New York in the twenties, he seems a sober, dry figure, reserved, restrained, melancholy. As a journalist in the strife of ante-bellum days he labored earnestly and uprightly and with a wise statesmanship, keeping to a middle course between compromise and opportunism on the one hand and the extreme partisanship of the abolitionists on the other. And yet we cannot help feeling with his biographer that "if he had caught a little of that noble moral enthusiasm that animated a poet like Whittier, an orator like Wendell Phillips, or a statesman like Sumner, he would have come down to posterity as a more interesting and inspiring figure as well as a better poet. Bryant kept outside of movements and preserved his art intact, yet with a certain loss in wide human sympathy."

Bryant's achievement as a poet was principally an achievement of his early years—it was a boy of seventeen that wrote "Thanatopsis." From his thirty-fifth year, when he became editor of The Evening Post, we lose sight, save at rare intervals, of the figure of the poet. His contributions to American literature were mostly accomplished before 1829. What he added after that was chiefly repetition, though in volume it was about equal to what he had already written. It involved no new interests and manifests no new forms of expression. "To a Waterfowl" is still to be considered his best poem, and it was composed in 1815, when he was twenty-one years old. His first volume of poetry, published in 1821, is characterized by Mr. Bradley as a significant event in our literary history, marking the birth of American poetry, just as surely as Irving's "Sketch Book" marks the birth of American prose literature.

It was, indeed, unfortunate for Bryant that he was the earliest of American poets, and Mr. Bradley points out the circumstances by which he was made so:

> He appeared much more remarkable to his early contemporaries than he ever can do to us, because of the contrast which he presented with what had gone before. And later, after a period in which he suffered somewhat of an eclipse through the rise of new schools and new poets to contest with him the palm of supremacy, his great age, the traditions of an earlier day which he represented, his personality, which so perfectly embodied the prophetic and seer-like aspect of the poetic ideal, and, finally, local pride in the possession of a poet whom New York could produce to oppose the claims of its rival, Boston, to literary supremacy—all these tended to create a regard for Bryant that was rather personal than literary.

Did his coming to New York act as a check to his poetic impulse and productive power? The social and literary coterie which Bryant came to join in 1824 was agreeable. There were men of talent like Irving, Cooper, Halleck, Verplanck, Paulding; there was a touch of fashionableness and Bohemianism about it all inseparable from literary society in a large city, and always peculiarly characteristic of New York. The literature that was produced was a part of that life, light and satirical; of profound personal expression there was little. Mr. Bradley says:

> In Boston or Cambridge he would have felt the stir of intellectual life about him, and his poetry, perfect in form, might have gained in depth and feeling. His education, though sound classically, had been narrow, and his spiritual resources were ill-fed. Just how much these were capable of being increased by liberal intercourse with talents more cultivated than his own one can, of course, only conjecture. But in New York there was not even the possibility of such a benefit to be derived from his associates. . . . In so far as he was a poet, he would be thrown back, even more than in Cummington and Great Barrington, upon his own native instincts and the tradition of his early religious training, if, indeed, in the sterile atmosphere of an unideal community these were not actually dulled and blunted.

Bryant wrought not only in his poetry, but also in his criticism, to enforce the truth that for a literature to be national it must first of all be natural, the genuine personal expression of an individual genius. That Bryant is not merely a provincial English poet, expressing merely formal sentimentality, as Prof. Barrett Wendell would have it, Mr. Bradley has little difficulty in showing. His Americanism, his native inspiration, his imaginative and sincere expression are certain. That his "school" was not that of contemporary English poetry merely goes to show that provincial America was lagging fifty years behind England when he began to write. There is in him none of Wordsworth's mystic pantheism; but, to offset this there is his own expression of the religious and moral ideals of Puritanism. Mr. Stoddard said that Bryant knew how to write exquisite episodes, like Wordsworth, and omit Wordsworth's intervening platitudes. Mr. Bradley finds that even in Bryant's most exquisite episodes there is almost always a touch of the obvious and commonplace, as well as the chill of an incomplete sympathy with his kind. Herein is the real weakness of Bryant's poetry. He reproduces only the charm of nature's loveliness; yet our critic finds also that if he sees nature with the eye of an artist, endowed with a finer genius for perfection and a higher gift of imaginative description than any other American poet, it is also with the feelings of a Puritan. The beauty he sees is moral beauty. The sinlessness of nature is a part of the aesthetic appeal to him. He is habitually preoccupied with death, and his prevailing moods are of sadness and brooding. But let not Bryant be underestimated. It is something to have written a poem that Matthew Arnold must call the best short poem in the language. And it is something, also, to have been the man of whom Lincoln said that it was worth his journey to the East merely to have seen him.

Six Girls.

Six of the very nicest girls one would ever care to meet are to be found in Anna Fuller's "Bookful of Girls." They are such happy, wholesome, honest sort of young things, with such very charming ways about them, that they beguile even older readers into following their adventures in spite of the fact that he, or more properly speaking she, for this is distinctly a feminine book—knows all the time that they were never written for her, but rather for her daughter or her younger sister.

The six girls are not related at all. Indeed, they have nothing whatever to do with one another. They each live in a separate and distinct story, and to all appearances don't even know of one another's existence. For instance, there was Blythe Halliday. She was called Blythe because her Scotch nurse pronounced her "a blythe lassie" at the immature age of three days. Her parents had been hesitating between Lucretia, after her father's mother, and Hannah, after her mother's, and so they compromised on Blythe. And Blythe was as cheerful as her name. She made every one on the transatlantic liner her friend, from the crabbed old Captain to the great poet traveling incognito; and not only that, but she found and restored to its aristocratic grandfather a little Italian baby whose mother had run away and married an opera singer, and afterward had died in America.

But even more winning than Blythe is Madge Burtwell. "Artful Madge," her brother dubbed her because she was so beautifully and tactlessly candid and because she had fixed her mind upon art as her life's ambition. Artful Madge's career is very pleasant to read about, and when at last she has earned the $50 imposed as a test by her father before she dare go to study in Paris, the reader is honestly glad for her.

And Polly Fitch! What a little heroine she was and how pluckily she cured her brother of that incipient pulmonary trouble. And then there was Olivia, who wanted a sundial very badly indeed, but who found, when her father actually promised her one, that she wanted still more to help a poor dweller in the tenements to fresh air and health in Colorado, and who, like the good child in the fairy book, got her sundial, anyway.

And lastly we have Di—she who bagged her own grandfather and brought him as game to the Thanksgiving feast at her home—although that grandfather had been self-exiled from his son's house for over sixteen years.

LIFE INSURANCE.

An Explanation of Its Principles and in Part of Its Practices, by William Alexander.*

To the average citizen this book by the Secretary of the Equitable Life Assurance Society will furnish a deal of information about a very mysterious science. The average citizen in question will probably skip the mathematical portions as soon as he gets a general notion of the principles and practices they are intended to explain, but he will end by having something like an idea of the reasons of some such things which have often puzzled and hardly less often (perhaps) exasperated him.

Mr. Alexander has adopted the plan of supposing an imaginary life insurance company undertaken by ordinary business men quite ignorant of the "science" of the thing. By explaining to them step by step how they must meet the problems which arise, he inducts the reader also into the mysteries. He shows how the actuary, starting from mortality statistics, arrives at a pretty accurate measure of the expectation of life at any given age, and so is able to say what premium each insured person must pay, and he shows how the bare sum sufficient to provide such insurance must be "loaded" to allow for the expenses of running the business. For instance, the calculated rate for $1,000 of ordinary life insurance at thirty-five years of age is $21.06 per annum; the "loaded rate," the "office rate," the rate actually charged, is $23.11. Mr. Alexander shows how the actuaries calculate a "level" rate as an equivalent for a series of premiums increasing as the insured grows older, and he explains the various forms of insurance other than the ordinary life policy—the endowment plan and the various combinations of that plan with the ordinary life plan. The general principles are comprehensible enough, though many of the figures are intended for people who are preparing for an insurance career. Further, Mr. Alexander gives a clue to what is meant by a "reserve," and shows why it is that a company with insurance in force to the amount of $171,556,895, and assets of $38,854,327, can have liabilities of only $23,387,640, and so a surplus of $7,466,686. We may not follow him here, but the explanation lies in what may be called the time allowance.

Again Mr. Alexander devotes a chapter to proving that "no company can afford to grant insurance at less than cost"—which seems simple enough. He also explains why it is that a man who has paid his premiums, say, for two years and then repents of his bargain can't get all his money back. It appears the man was insured for those two years on a basis calculated for a much longer term, and the price was made accordingly. Moreover, since the insurance company cannot withdraw from the bargain and the insured can withdraw when he pleases, the fact that he will lose more or less of what he has put up serves to prevent the use of his advantage, while if he does withdraw in spite of the penalty, it gives the company a compensatory advantage. Further on Mr. Alexander discusses the present tendency to be liberal with backsliding policy holders and how far it is a good thing. By way of contrast he quotes the rigid older rules.

One of the most prominent of our American companies (a company which now gives its policy holders world-wide freedom) began by issuing policies which were so framed that they became "null and void" and all payments under them were "forfeited to the company" for any one of the following reasons:

1. The non-payment of any premiums. 2. Death by the insured's own hand. 3. Any untrue statement in the application. 4. Death upon the high seas. 5. Death in consequence of a duel. 7. Death in the known violation of any law of the United States or of any State or province wherein residence and travel are permitted. 8. Residence or travel south of the southern boundaries of Virginia and Kentucky between July 1 and Nov. 1; at any time beyond the settled limits of the United States and the British provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick. 9. Military or naval service, the militia not in actual service excepted.

The author does not neglect, of course, explanations of the differences between stock companies, where the profits are professedly the property of the stockholders, and mutual companies, where the profits, by theory at least, are divided among the policy holders. He shows, too, how the two plans are combined, and indicates something of the difficulty of arriving at an equitable apportionment of dividends. Mr. Alexander shows again how all-important is the stability of an insurance company; how that virtue is the basic virtue which makes insurance really insure, and how therefore the planning of the premiums too high is an evil easily reparable, (by dividends or otherwise,) while placing them too low inevitably brings ruin. He further explains how necessary it is that an insurance company shall constantly renew its strength by insuring new lives, and answers another question which has puzzled laymen, viz., why it is that though premiums are estimated on the basis of average mortality, only selected lives are actually insured. The reason, he says, is simply that so long as life insurance is not compulsory the natural tendency is to bunch insurance on the weaker lives and so give a mortality of insured persons very far above the average.

The book goes on to explain the elaborate machinery of a modern insurance company, and provides and analyses samples of policies and business statements. It discusses annuities and vigorously combats the notion that there is any gambling element in insurance. Moreover, laudatory testimony of clergymen is printed.

In short, Mr. Alexander's book is not altogether an explanation of what insurance is; it is a plea for insurance, a very long and intelligent insurance agent's argument for insurance in general and the old-established companies in particular. The book is certainly informing. It is not altogether solemn either. It has its humors both intentional and unintentional.

Secretary Stanton.

EDWIN McMASTERS STANTON. The Autocrat of Rebellion, Emancipation, and Reconstruction. By Frank Abial Flower. 8vo. Pp. 625. Illustrated. Akron, Ohio: The Saalfield Publishing Company.

A life of Stanton embraces the period from Buchanan's Presidency through the turbulent era of reconstruction under Johnson. It thus, in Mr. Flower's words, "gives as by a searchlight from within the only story of those prodigious epochs that is not disconnected or fragmentary or in some feature misleading." To his eye Stanton is "the most majestic civil figure observable in the rebellion horizon, . . . the dominating spirit and power in the quaking Republic during seven of its most tumultuous and eventful years." His achievements in those years, according to Mr. Flower's tabulated list, number twenty-nine; and this portly volume is devoted to describing them in detail. The author has a luxurious and picturesque flow of language that abounds in superlatives. Mr. Stanton (purposely, as the historian believes,) left no private letter books or other material for biography not to be found in official records or seen in his public acts—a fact that makes the labor of compiling a volume giving a true picture of what he did laborious and difficult.

Mr. Flower believes that what he has done "annihilates much that has heretofore been accepted as 'history,' and reverses the positions of many of the foremost actors of the century." Public records, testimony of actual witnesses, and a number of letters, nearly all new to the public, are the material upon which the book is founded. The story is a thrilling one, and Mr. Flower's style lets no opportunity for an impressive and picturesque point to escape and paints the rapidly moving panorama of events in high colors. Stanton's aggressive and imperious personality; his absolute conviction of the necessity for quick and arbitrary action whenever the exigencies of the situation demanded it, the hostilities he aroused, led to many critical situations. Mr. Flower is his unvarying champion in upholding his wisdom and the justice and propriety of his actions.

Most of these episodes have become enrolled in history. Among the incidents which he declares he makes public for the first time is that turning upon McClellan's unsoldierly and insulting telegram to Stanton after the defeat at Gaines's Mills on June 27, 1862. McClellan had been ordered to attack. Being defeated, he telegraphed Stanton that he was not responsible for the result, and closing, said: "If I save the army now, I tell you plainly that I owe no thanks to you or any person in Washington. You have done your best to sacrifice the army."

Had such language been used in any other country toward a superior the offender would certainly have been cashiered and probably shot. But these words were omitted from the copy of the telegram that was furnished to Stanton and by him handed to Lincoln. How they were omitted is told in the words of Major Johnson, Mr. Stanton's confidential clerk. Col. Stanton, supervisor and censor of telegraphs, who received the message, declared to Assistant Secretary Eckert that the charge was false and treasonable, and that, while it was doubtful if the censor had authority to suppress a telegram from McClellan to the Secretary of War, yet he could not allow himself as censor to be used to insult it to the Secretary. The telegram minus the offensive words was recopied and so taken to Stanton and the President. Neither knew of its mutilation. Neither the staff nor the mutilated telegram is now on file in the War Department. McClellan's intention was, Major Johnson says, to publish the entire and shift the burden of the defeat from his own shoulders to Stanton's "Own Story," published in 1864. Angered Stanton with the mutilation. That Col. Stanford's expurgation saved McClellan from disgrace is due to Mr. Flower, who also thinks it has led many subsequent writers into protecting some reputations "unduly."

Industrial Peace.

Before dealing (in a practical fashion) with the problems of industrial peace, it is well to consider (in a theoretical fashion) what they are, and what they involve. To many people the phrase "industrial peace" is a mere catchword, and they are apt to think that the whole matter could be settled if only the employers and employees would be reasonable. Unfortunately, the matter is not so simple as that. Industrial peace is not merely the absence of war, but the presence of a certain relation between employers and employees. Under the present system of industry, the relation between employer and employee is not one that can be described as either friendly or unfriendly. It is simply a relation of fact, which may be friendly or unfriendly, according to circumstances. Under the present system of industry, the employer is the man who has capital, and who therefore has the power to employ labor. The employee is the man who has labor, and who therefore has the power to employ capital. The employer is the man who has capital, and who therefore has the power to employ labor. The employee is the man who has labor, and who therefore has the power to employ capital. The employer is the man who has capital, and who therefore has the power to employ labor. The employee is the man who has labor, and who therefore has the power to employ capital.

THE BEAUTIFUL LADY

By BOOTH TARKINGTON,

Author of MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE.

THEY say that lightning never strikes twice in the same place. But every rule has its exception, as is proved in the present instance, for there is no doubt that in "The Beautiful Lady," Mr. Tarkington's latest work, the lightning of genius has struck precisely where it struck in his famous earlier work, "Monsieur Beaucaire." There are few authors in the whole range of literature who have achieved two such perfect narrations, identical in spirit and fraught with the same exquisite grace and charm. The scene of the story is laid in modern Naples and Paris.

The publishers in making the book itself have tried to improve upon the attractiveness of Beaucaire, even. It is peculiarly appropriate as a gift book. There are seven illustrations by Blendon Campbell and the book is decorated throughout by William Jordan. Cloth 12mo. $1.25.

MIRABEAU.

MR. WARWICK has not presented anything new in this volume descriptive of Mirabeau and the part he played in the early scenes of the French Revolution. Nor was it his object or expectation to do so. His original design was to trace briefly the causes of the Revolution, and to group its principal events around Mirabeau, then Danton, and lastly Robespierre—the men who were the manifestation of the Revolution in its three distinctive periods. The present book is the first of this projected series. Few periods of history have been more voluminously and minutely studied than this, and Mr. Warwick found material which he has freely used, abundantly at his hand.

The mastery of that material rather than the discovery of new additions to it, the clear and logical presentation of it, that was his task. Nor is it to discredit him to say that he has scarcely drawn any new deductions or formed any new estimates from it. Most of the possible deductions have been drawn, most of the possible estimates formed, in one way or another. It is his credit that he has made a readable, intelligible account of the exciting, in many ways complicated and rapidly moving series of events of which he treats. He does not go too deeply into analysis or philosophical speculation. His survey of the events and conditions of things that led up to the volcanic upheaval of the oppressed classes in France is rapidly sketched and picturesque; his pictures of the personages clearly outlined. There is no great distinction in his style, little compelling fire in his accounts of people and events; not much subtlety in his judgments. He is sometimes prolix and sometimes repeats himself. Clarity and intelligibility are the merits of the book; and they are valuable qualities.

The story is begun with a survey of the state of the Court and of the people under Louis XIV. and Louis XV.—the wanton profligacy of the one, the growing wretchedness of the other; the abortive attempts of Turgot and Necker to improve the fiscal affairs of the country, the strong intrenchment of the privileged classes that brought this to naught. Louis XVI. was a dull, but well-meaning, Prince, fairly decent in his conduct, and utterly incapable in his rule; in a court of vice and immorality an example of probity and chastity. Marie Antoinette was, to say the least, a very foolish woman, lacking in tact, disregarding the duties she owed to the public and her exalted office of Queen, neglectful of the proprieties of life. Yet this utter disregard of public opinion, thinks Mr. Warwick, may be taken as a proof of her honesty, and it is unfair to judge her by a rule we would apply to-day, without consideration of her surroundings and her lack of a strong hand to guide her.

Mirabeau first appears upon the scene as the commanding figure in the States General, convened at Versailles in 1789; a personality so striking that the strongest men dwindled in comparison:

> He was the most picturesque figure in the Assembly. His reputation, his wild career, his escapades, his vices, his imprisonments, his love affairs, his extravagances, his writings, his eloquence, his ability, were known throughout all France. The story of his life was an epic.

Carlyle calls him of a genius equal in strength to Napoleon's, but a much humaner genius, almost a poetic one, with wider sympathies of his own, and appealing far more persuasively to the sympathies of men. Some of the historians have accepted without question the astonishing statements and pretensions of the Mirabeau family as to its origin, as has Carlyle. But the facts, determined by later and more precise investigators, are that Riquettis (that being the family name) were not descended from any Arrighettis, nobles exiled from Florence, who settled in Provence, nor did that intermarriage with the Medici, which the great Mirabeau affected to regard as the one blot on the family escutcheon, ever take place. On the contrary, they are traced back to an enterprising merchant of Marseilles, who accumulated a fortune and bought a castle and a pedigree. Gabriel Honoré came by his remarkable qualities rightfully, as the history of his line shows. The story of his stormy, swashbuckling youth is one for a "historical novelist" of the current or recently declining school. Fights, imprisonment under letters of cachet, constant turmoil, especially with his father; amorous escapades of all sorts, make up the sum of his earlier years. His elopement with Sophie Monnier, their life in poverty together in Holland till they were tracked down by his father, who had never ceased to persecute and abuse him with more or less reason, form the most striking episode of these years. The

> He was not a party man or a party leader, but he had supreme confidence in himself. He saw the growing power of Robespierre and Desmoulins, and courted them, using them to gain his own ends. He desired a place in the Ministry where he could strengthen the King in his weakness and supplant the shortcomings of Necker.
> The Court began negotiations with him at length, but the Queen's hostility prevented his entering the Ministry. The dealings of Mirabeau in these negotiations are not wholly understood. They were naturally kept secret. But it is clear that after delays of various kinds he entered into a definite treaty with the Court in 1790. He received a monthly "pension"; his debts were paid, and promissory notes for 1,000,000 francs were given him. He was to give the King in return "loyalty, zeal, activity, energy, and a courage surpassing all that is probably expected of him." The Court still opposed him. His efforts to win over Lafayette were in vain, and the latter's dislike and fear of Mirabeau made him proof against his appeals, cajolery, flattery, and schemes. To earn his pay from the King Mirabeau had to maintain his popularity; it was a difficult and dangerous position. The change in his manner of living made everybody suspect the source of his new prosperity; but he thundered as usual from the tribune, and in no word gave his enemies opportunity to impugn his loyalty to the Revolution. Nor did he, as Mr. Warwick points out, at any time change his views; he was consistent in advocating with all his might the principles for which he had contended from the very beginning.
> And so, in judging him, we must be guided in our judgment by the standard of his period and the conditions under which he was paid. As Justin McCarthy says, quoted with our historian's approbation:
> Mirabeau took money from the King because he was a loyal and avowed supporter of the monarchy. No serious student of the career of Mirabeau, putting himself with any vitality into the place of the man, need feel in any degree called upon to avow shame for him.

He was elected President of the Assembly, but the tide soon turned decisively against him with the Jacobins. He was fiercely attacked in the Club, and there was open war against him. By the end of 1790 he felt his vital forces waning, and in March of next year he succumbed. Whether he died by poison or not is still an unsettled question. The city was profoundly moved by his death. Business and amusement were suspended. But Marat and Robespierre rejoiced and did not conceal their rejoicing, and Desmoulins denounced his public career and political principles.

> In real statesmanship, in comprehension and grasp of intellect it is Mr. Warwick's judgment that Mirabeau stood alone; Carlyle called him by far the strongest practical intellect of his time. He was essentially the orator of the Revolution, a time when inflammatory eloquence had a peculiar power; and there is no one of his period in France with whom he can be compared, and Mr. Warwick advances it as one of the strongest proofs of the belief in the greatness of Mirabeau that it is a mooted question whether or not, if he had lived, he could have saved the monarchy and turned the forces of the Revolution in another direction.

THE VICTORIA CROSS

Philip A. Wilkins's Account of the Acts of Bravery Which Have Secured This Medal for 520 British Soldiers.*

THE world over, only three medals are given for acts of bravery performed in presence of an enemy, the Iron Cross of Germany, our own Medal of Honor, and the British Victoria Cross. Of these the last named undoubtedly ranks highest. Fifty thousand men got the Iron Cross after the war with France; most of our medals of honor have been given for bravery, but others were given for sentimental reasons—the men who guarded or carried Lincoln's coffin received medals; some men had special acts of Congress passed giving medals to them, and at least one man took his medal without authority, but in the fifty years since the Victoria Cross was instituted only 520 men all told have received it. It is hard to get; no act of Parliament will award it, no pull with the Sovereign as Fountain of Honor. One has to risk his life to get it, and if he goes wrong afterward it is likely to be taken from him. So one must be brave to win it and keep "fit" to retain it—there can be no doubt about the Victoria Cross ranking the other medals bestowed for bravery.

A very interesting account of the 520 men who have won the cross has just been published by Mr. Philip A. Wilkins. It makes a good-sized volume of nearly 450 pages, with photographs of all the recipients that could be obtained, and besides the official notices of the acts for which the medals were bestowed, fuller accounts of the various brave deeds. Many of the acts were done to save life; some, and those the most exploited, to save the "Queen's colors," or to defend guns. There is a sort of sameness about the accounts, for even bravery may pall on one.

It is a wonderful list of brave men, that of the Victoria Cross. The decoration was instituted on Jan. 29, 1856, and its bestowal was made retroactive to the beginning of the Crimean War. Mr. Lucas, mate on her Majesty's ship Hecla, was the first person to receive it, for throwing overboard a live shell which had fallen on the ship's deck. He is now a Rear Admiral retired. The first enlisted man to get the medal was Sergt. John Knox of the Scots Fusiliers, who lost an arm at the Alma, but stayed in the army and died a Major in the Rifle Brigade. Sergt. Luke O'Connor of the Twenty-third Foot won the cross at the Alma for carrying the "Queen's colors" when the bearer was killed, although he himself was wounded, and when he retired at the age of fifty-six, he held the actual rank of Major General.

Gen. O'Connor is not the only V. C. who rose from the ranks. "Wullie" McBean was another. He was an Inverneshire plowman when he enlisted in the Ninety-third Foot—the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders. Because he rolled as he walked the Drill Corporal abused him, and a friend suggested that he thrash the bully. "Na, na, man," said McBean, "that'll never do. A'm goin' to command this regiment, an' 'twould never do to be brought before the Colonel for thrashing the Drill Corporal." McBean kept his word, becoming Major General, and commanding the regiment. He won the cross for killing eleven mutineers at one of the fights around Lucknow—a feat that reminds one of the Paladins or of a fairy story.

Four civilians have gained the cross—William McDonnell, a Magistrate, who cut out a boatload of fugitives from under the fire of the Sepoy mutineers; Ross Mangles, an Assistant Magistrate, who volunteered to help relieve an isolated post besieged by the Sepoys, and carried a wounded soldier on his back for six miles under a fire from the mutineers, stopping from time to time to keep the Sepoys at bay; Thomas Henry "Lucknow" Kavanagh, who made his way out of Lucknow through the mutineers' lines with information for Sir Colin Campbell, and the Rev. John William Adams, who served with Sir Frederick Roberts in Afghan, and rescued two men from drowning under a fire from the Afghans.

Most famous of deeds that have won the Victoria Cross were the defense of Rorke's Drift and the saving of the "Queen's colors" of the Twenty-fourth Regiment during the Zulu war of 1879. By some error of judgment, Rorke's Drift was abandoned except for 104 officers and men, and 35 sick men. Between 3,000 and 4,000 Zulus attacked the place on Jan. 23, the fight lasting for twelve hours without cessation. The defenders lost 17 men, the Zulus some 600.

Only a day previous the Zulus had attacked and wiped out the second battalion of the Twenty-fourth at Isandlwana. Lieuts. Melvill and Coghill were ordered > colors" of the regiment. They succeeded, but were themselves killed. On the color pole of the regiment now hangs a silver wreath, placed by the Queen, which bears the names of Lieuts. Chard and Bromhead of Rorke's Drift, and Melvill and Coghill of Isandlwana.

> The roll of Victoria Cross wearers contains an undue proportion of Irishmen. There are ninety-seven of the "fighting race, Kelly and Burke and Shea," on the list, and probably a score of others whose birthplaces are not given—nearly a quarter of them all come from Ireland, ranking from private to Field Marshal. And three negroes have received the decoration: William Hall, Captain of the Foretop, H. M. S. Shannon, at Lucknow, while in Peel's Naval Brigade; Samuel Hodge of the West India Regiment, and William Gordon of the same regiment. The cross was given last to Lieut. Wallace Wright for gallantry during the Nigeria campaign of 1903, when he led 40 men against 3,000 natives, driving them back and routing them.
> During the Crimean war 111 men received the cross; the Indian mutiny won it for 182; 2 men got it during the Abyssinian campaign; 16 in Afghanistan, and 23 in Zululand, in 1878 and 1879, and 78 during the Boer war. The navy has had 43 wearers of the decoration, while the Twenty-fourth Foot, now the South Wales Borderers, has had 16 of its men decorated. No man has yet won the cross a second time. Gen. Baldwin of our army holds two medals of honor for gallantry—a record unique among the fighting men of the world probably.

Chickens and Ducks.

THE POULTRY BOOK. By Many Expert American Breeders and Harrison Weir, F. R. H. S., Under the Editorship of Prof. Wallis Grant Johnson and George O. Brown. Illustrated from Drawings in Color and Black and White by Mr. Weir and from Photographs. In three volumes. Cloth, 8vo. Pp. xxii.-1,311. New York: Doubleday, Page & Co. $12.

If there is not a sudden increase in poultry raising—or perhaps, rather, in attempts at poultry raising—it will be remarkable in view of the publication of the "Poultry Book." In appearance it is a book "that should be in every gentleman's library," and for its contents, it is one that should be on every country gentleman's book shelf. Even the real farmer, who contents himself with a patent outside weekly and raises chickens by rule of thumb, might very profitably get a copy. The book committees of the country libraries are likely to find the "Poultry Book" among the most popular sets on their shelves, if they summon up resolution and money enough to buy it.

Mr. Harrison Weir, the founder of cat clubs, the artist of animals, is "the true and onlie begetter" of the "Poultry Book." The American publishers acquired the rights to his book on poultry raising and have had it rewritten, therefore, by American experts to meet American needs, which take in both Canada and Texas. The drawings, however, are by Mr. Weir, and his material has been used wherever it could be. The result of the operation is a very complete and exhaustive treatise on poultry of all kinds, which is likely to be the standard work on the subject for many years to come.

Very properly, the "Poultry Book" begins at the beginning, with the egg, and this Easter novelty it considers both from a commercial point of view and from that of the hen itself. It tells all about the egg—and the fowl, too, for that matter—except how to cook it. Probably the publishers intend to issue a cook book to round out their series of manuals and desire to keep a public for that. Incubators and chicken rearing and chicken feeding naturally follow the discussion of the egg. The chapter on feeding is very full; specimen diets are given, according to the market fowl that is wanted, and the different kinds of food are analyzed and compared at considerable length and very clearly. Besides this, directions are given for the preparation of poultry for market; there is more than one way.

Mr. Weir has contributed various antiquarian information about poultry, and, because the volumes deal with fowl of all kinds, a chapter on gamecocks is inserted, which it may be hoped will not be the cause of increased activity among the anti-cruelty societies.

The second and third volumes discuss the various breeds of poultry at length, Mr. Weir, who remembers the "Cochin-China craze" of nearly sixty years ago, contributing to the history of the various commercial breeds. After the chickens of all degrees, from the barnyard fowl to the exhibition cock, have been considered and commented upon, this wide-reaching book studies bantams, geese, and ducks, and tells how to raise them successfully and how to market them. Pigeons and squabs receive attention, and the book ends with chapters descriptive of the less-known birds that can be classed as poultry—the swan, with a recipe in rhyme for roasting it; pheasants, the peacock, the guinea fowl, and the turkey.

To country people the book should prove most attractive and helpful; to the city man, who knows more of "small birds" than of poultry, there is a mine of quaint matter, probably contributed by Mr. Weir, that will entertain. Except for its index, which foolishly refers to pages only, and not to volumes, we can commend the "Poultry Book" thoroughly.

A LABOR PROBLEM.

It may be said with the courage of conviction that in his new novel, "The Walking Delegate," Mr. Leroy Scott has planted a literary standard in the field of American labor. Strictly speaking, "The Walking Delegate" is not a literary work, and, to judge by this example of his diction, Mr. Scott is not a stylist; but there is a stamp of truth upon this tale of labor union life, and whether the conditions are exaggerated—as to this who but the initiate may speak?—the apparent realism of the book is convincing to one who knows nothing of the inside of labor struggles. The story begins in a cheerless environment, a half-finished hotel structure—"a steel framework rearing itself into the centre of the overhead grayness." Around this unromantic skeleton the author weaves the beginning of a story of the battle of labor and capital, a still-fought struggle of two human hearts between the layers of social strata and an underworld grapple of uncouth cunning with uncouth honesty.

"Buck" Foley is the name given by the author to the powerful central figure, the walking delegate, who, though considerably developed in character, cunning, and physique, bears a haunting resemblance to a possible original whose ignominious death after imprisonment for extortion is still in the memory of the public. Foley is the tyrant of the Iron Workers' Union, the man who grips the whole labor situation in New York City. He is a wonderful character, this "Buck" Foley. His greatest weakness is the knowledge of his own strength. He is a wit, an orator, a diplomat, a hero, an arch villain; in fact, he is a great man perverted.

Tom Keating, on the other hand, is a man of one keen, unswerving purpose, the purpose laid down by Stevenson—"to be honest; to be kind; to earn a little, and to spend a little less; to keep a few friends, and that without capitulation, and, upon the same grim condition, to keep friends with one's self." Keating is foreman to a contractor named Driscoll, and throughout the turmoil the champion of union honesty and justice in the war with capital. The fight for the mastery between Keating and Foley brings to light the power of a "grafting" delegate, the utter helplessness of capital when such a man orders a strike, and the terrible domestic conditions which result from a cessation of labor at the word of this extortionist.

The moment Keating opposes Foley the former finds himself out of work and unable to procure any; not because his artisan ability is not appreciated by contractors. Even the union friends of the foreman, while they hate the walking delegate, fear to aid Keating in his fight to have the walking delegate deposed as a preliminary to an honest union. There are wives and families to be considered, and the mere possibility of defeat means the mere possibility of expulsion and starvation. But Keating is nominated for walking delegate. When election day arrives, thousands of men who dared not back the foreman openly take advantage of the secrecy of the ballot to drive out the incumbent. The latter's defeat seems certain, when a gang of Foley's picked ruffians, facetiously known as "the Entertainment Committee," starts a riot, in the confusion of which the ballot boxes are handled to the detriment of the honest candidate.

Still out of a job, with his trade taunting him more than ever, the honest foreman organizes a strike. "If we win the strike with Foley against it, that'll be the end of him," says Keating to a friend. Foley opposes the strike, as was expected, his pockets already being well lined to stave off trouble. The men, led by Keating, clamor for better treatment. The walking delegate's position is in danger. The plucky foreman puts the strike motion to the union meeting. It is carried. Then "Buck" Foley gets up and coolly gathers up the enthusiasm to his own story in a speech on "blood-suckin' bosses," finishing his inflammatory address with an amendment to strike for 10 per cent. increase! By this sudden change of front, which is mistaken by the sheep of the union for diplomacy, the walking delegate takes the wind out of Keating's sails and steals his thunder.

But Keating wins when, after the strike has been in force for some time, the foreman discovers that the walking delegate has sold the strike to Baxter, President of the Iron Employers' Association for $50,000. The honest foreman plans a coup to be executed on the very night when the vote to return to work is passed by the union. Keating has his evidence to hand, gathered by private detectives who watched the meeting of Foley and Baxter and the subsequent lodging of the "graft" in various banks. The climax is dramatic. The walking delegate concludes a heart-broken speech on the defeat of the union like this:

"Boys, this is the hardest hour o' my life. I ain't very used to losin' fights. I think youse could count in a couple o' days all the fights I've lost for youse. [A cry: "Never a one, Buck."] An' it comes mighty hard for me to begin to lose now. If I was to do what I want to do, I'd say, 'Let's never give in.' But I know what's best for the union, boys, an' so I lose my first fight."

He sank back into his seat, and his head fell forward upon his breast.

After this clever speech, Tom Keating's cry of "Buck Foley's sold you out!" comes as a thunderbolt upon a funeral service. A riot ensues, but the foreman's victory is complete. Foley is mobbed nearly to death, being rescued by detectives instructed by the District Attorney's office to arrest the walking delegate on charges of extortion preferred by Baxter, who, learning of Keating's discovery, immediately took the action, in order to save himself and the side of capital from suspicion of complicity and the well-merited shame of bribery.

There is the central action of the story, but the telling of the whole tale has brought to the pages of "The Walking Delegate" pen pictures of men who are the bone, brain, sinew, and cunning of the great labor situation—Driscoll, the contractor, so aggressive that he grew mutton chops because somebody disliked them; Baxter, the President of the Employers' Association, with his steely principle that only snapped to gratify his wife's ambition; Foley, who, covered with blood and rascal as he was, had still enough of the admiration of the strong man for a stronger to hold out his hand to Keating in the moment of defeat and say: "Luck to youse!" And the women, the helpmates of those men, are portrayed with pathetic, or admirable, or repulsive realism. There is Mrs. Barry, who, seeing the anxious look on her husband's face at the word "strike," says: "Go ahead. I'll take in washin', John"; Mrs. Baxter, whose only concern in the strike is that she will have to cut down her Newport expenses; Anna Petersen, the ex-Salvation Army lassie, who suffered with her "scab" husband, an ex-prizefighter, who, driven out by the union, committed the besetting "sin" for the baby's sake; Maggie Keating, the brainless, selfish wife of the plucky foreman, who crushed the traitor delegate and won the "lost" strike, and Ruth Arnold, the stenographer, who learned to love the man whose fight she witnessed from the vantage ground of the iron employer's office.

The foreman, Maggie Keating, and Ruth Arnold supply a love story, the interest of which is compelling. Ruth is a society girl who preferred to work rather than merely to live. Hers is the refining, impelling influence upon Keating. She offers to do clerical work in the fight; like a clever woman she lets him talk of his ambitions more than of his deeds; and she it is who first informs him that Foley has sold the strike. Ruth is expected to marry a junior partner of Baxter, whose niece she is. The love between the girl and Keating is mutual, but he has never told her that he is married, because, considering the social chasm between them, the disclosure has seemed to him unnecessary. The only approach to an outright love scene is where he says he is married. There is more pleasure for the æsthete in this passage than joy for the shop girl. In the moment of Keating's triumph, when he is lying in the gaudy parlor of his home, battered and bruised, Ruth has occasion to enter with her employer, Driscoll. She leaves her gloves and later returns for them. Mrs. Keating is out.

"I hope—you'll be happy—always," she said.

"Yes—and I hope you—"

"Good-bye."

"Good-bye."

Their eyes held steadfastly to each other for a moment; she seemed to waver, and she caught the back of a chair—then she turned and went out.

For long he watched the door out of which she had gone; then heedless of the pain, he rolled over and stared at one great poppy in the back of the couch.

There the story ends. But it would be interesting to know if the noble Keating passed unscathed through the vista of life behind that "one great poppy."

Guides for the Tourist.

Editions for 1905 of Baedeker's "Belgium and Holland," (18mo, thin paper. Pp. 475. New York: Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.80 net) and W. J. Rolfe's annual "Satchel Guide for the Vacation Tourist in Europe" (16mo. Pp. 307. Leather bound. Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50 net) are appearing. The Baedeker volume contains directions for traveling not only through Belgium and Holland, but also through the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg. There are fifteen maps and thirty plans in the book. Additional notes are given concerning hotels, new railways, &c.

The first 1905 edition of Dr. Rolfe's guide includes a compact itinerary of the British Isles, Belgium, Holland, Germany, the Rhine country, Switzerland, France, Austria, and Italy. The list of hotels has been thoroughly revised; corrections in routes, railway fares, &c., have been made; new maps have been inserted, with local changes in the plans of London and Paris. In the pockets of the covers of the little volume are a plan of London and a map of Great Britain and Ireland.

Art of Speaking Correctly.

The Rev. Albert Francis Tenney, M. A., instructor in elocution at the General Theological Seminary, N. Y., and at the Berkeley Divinity School, Middletown, Conn., has adapted his "Manual of Elocution and Expression," (12mo., Pp. 300, cloth; New York: E. P. Dutton & Co., $1.50) especially for the use of theological students and clergymen. The volume is mostly made up of citations from the opinions and writings of others on vocal training and expression, and has only been written, the author points out in his preface, to fill the place left vacant by the Rev. Dr. Francis T. Russell's "Use of the Voice in Reading and Speaking," which is now out of print. It is really a text book for students, to whom certain points could be explained by the "living" voice of the tutor.

The largest part of the book is devoted to "Voice Production," and the author treats of tone, the parts of the body that are involved in the production of tone, the mouth, the lungs, the larynx, operation of the vocal mechanism, and the application of breath pressure to tone production. Then comes a consideration of "Enunciation"—vowels, consonants, vocal defects, errors in pronunciation, and the standard of pronunciation—each have chapters. In the third section of the book is discussed "Adaptation of Voice to Thought and Sentiment"; Part IV. treats of gesture, Part V. of the liturgical use of the voice, Part VI. the public reading of Holy Scripture, and the author closes with several chapters on "Pulpit Oratory." In the appendices are given the correct pronunciation of Scripture proper names, lists of Scripture proper names, and words often mispronounced, passages of the Bible quoted from or referred to, some hints on the care of the voice, and some notes on elocutionary training. Examples are given not only from the Bible but also from the best English and American writers.

Livy.

Books I., XXI., and XXII. of Livy's "Ab Urbe Condita" have been edited, in one volume, with an introduction, commentary, and index, by Emory B. Lease of the College of the City of New York. (12mo, Pp. lxxii.-438, cloth, in the Glider-sleeve-Lodge Latin Series. New York: The University Publishing Company.)

In preparing the volume, the editor writes, he has been guided "by the conviction that Livy's pre-eminence in the world of letters rests on his mastery of literary expression, that the language of Livy is alike his chief charm and the student's chief difficulty." His aim, therefore, has been to call the student's attention to those peculiarities of style that have given the prose of the great Roman historian his fame and its characteristic quality; and he emphasizes the important part that Livy played in the development of the Latin tongue. In the lengthy introduction Prof. Lease writes concerning Livy's life and works, the early Roman annalists to whom Livy refers, the "History of Rome," the syntax and style of Livy—his archaisms, poetical usages, colloquialisms, grecisms, neologisms; some hints on translation, a list of topics suitable for discussion of the relation of Livy's narrative to Roman antiquities and Roman life, and a chronological table. The commentary takes up the second half of the book, and in it are not only explained certain terms, events, &c., in the history, but references to authorities are also given. There are several maps and plans in the book.

WELLS'S UTOPIA.

The Ingenious Philosopher Romancer's Latest Imaginative Work.

In his earlier sociological essays entitled "Anticipations" and "Mankind in the Making," Mr. H. G. Wells has now added a third essay on the future, "A Modern Utopia." Like his others, it is carefully thought out and reasoned, and holds together much better than the ideal commonwealths imagined by his predecessors. It is to be noted, in passing, that the governmental ideal of the Bible is a despotism or a monarchy; Utopia-makers, however, always plan a republic. Mr. Wells's modern Utopia is one, and its theory seems much more feasible than that of Mr. Bellamy's accidental "Looking Backward," which it may be remembered served as the constitutional textbook of the Nationalists. "Feasible," however, is a matter of comparison, even with Mr. Bellamy and Mr. Wells.

What sort of a place is Mr. Wells's Modern Utopia? In the first place, it is near Switzerland; that is, the two travelers from whose remarks we learn about the country are in Switzerland, and suddenly find themselves in Utopia. It does not seem an unfair deduction, then, that Mr. Wells approves highly of the Swiss Government. The new country, being idealized on modern conditions, is large—differing from previous Utopias, some of which have been merely parochial in size; covers an entire planet, a planet like our own, with the same continents, islands, cities, inhabitants. Only the inhabitants will speak a single language.

I fancy it will be a coalesced language, the synthesis of many. In the past, ingenious men have speculated on the inquiry: "Which language will survive?" The question was badly put. I think now that the wedding and survival of several in a common offspring is a far more probable thing.

The Utopias of the past objected to strangers; Mr. Wells's being conceived on modern ideas, does not repel them. And within its world limits its people will be free—not lawless, but "the State will have effectually chipped away just all those spendthrift liberties that waste liberty, and not one liberty more, and so have attained the maximum general freedom." It follows then that individualities will not be suppressed; it will be not by assimilation, but by understanding, that the modern Utopia will achieve itself. A strong point in its government will be that the Utopians, having systematized their sociology, "will have given some attention to minor officials, a matter too much neglected by the social reformer on earth. They will not put into the hands of a common policeman powers direct and indirect that would be dangerous to the public in the hands of a Judge. And they will have avoided the immeasurable error of making their control of the drink traffic a source of public revenue. The conditions of physical happiness will be better understood in Utopia; it will be worth while to be there, and the intelligent citizen will watch himself closely."

The State will be the sole land owner, though the local government will hold under it—a sort of feudal relationship existing between them, but the underlying object of all the laws will be a universal maximum of individual freedom. A Utopian may buy and sell and keep; he may have money and use it, within certain limits. Of what he did not gain for himself or bequeath for the education of his children the State will take at his death the lion's share. In return, however, every Utopian will have a right to a living; the State will insure him a minimum wage and provide him with work. There will be nothing to prevent him from working for higher wages, if he can; if he cannot work he has a right to support, not to local charity, grudgingly extended, but to a general and willingly given State aid. If he will not work, or is wicked, he will not be drummed out of camp, but will be sent to an island where his fellows are segregated; "there will be no masking the lesson—'Which do you value most, the wide world of humanity or this evil trend in you?' From that discipline at last the prisoners will return." The insane, of course, will need care, but the other delinquents or deficients will look after themselves on their own islands.

"'Your ways are not our ways,' says the State; 'but there is freedom and a company of kindred spirits. Elect your rulers, do as it pleases you to do. We will take care of the knaves, but for the rest—deal yourself with God.' * * *

"And you see the big convict steamship standing in to the Island of Incurable Cheats. The landing place is clear of people, but beyond the gates a number of engagingly smart looking individuals loiter speculatively. One or two inhabitants in reduced circumstances would act as hotel touts, there are several hotel omnibuses and a Bureau de Change, certainly a Bureau de Change. And a small house with a large board aimed point blank seaward declares itself a Gratis Information Office, and next to it rises the graceful dome of a small casino. Beyond, great hoardings proclaim the advantages of many island specialties, a bustling com-

"A MODERN UTOPIA. By H. G. Wells. With illustrations by E. J. Sullivan. One volume. Pp. xi-393. 8vo. Cloth. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.

In Utopia a man of the middle class has money enough, the minimum wage, that is, to pay for his "keep," full insurance against ill-health or old age, or any debt that paternity may have brought upon him. But they want no more heirs. If he won't work, there is an island of thieves where he can go.

Motherhood is a service to the Utopian State, which pays women who under legitimate sanctions become mothers, pays them regularly enough to keep them fully quiet of the fathers, so long as the children reach a minimum standard of health, and sure if the children surpass that minimum. "This extent of intervention will abolish two or three hardships of the civilized life. It will end the hardships of the majority of widows who on earth are poor and incumbered exactly in proportion as they have discharged the chief distinctive duty of a woman, and miserable just in proportion as their standard of life and education is high. In short, Utopia will hold that sound childbearing and rearing is a service done, not to a particular man, but to the whole community, and all its legal arrangements for motherhood will be based on that conception."

Utopia is ruled by "voluntary nobleness" chiefly. This order is open to every physically and mentally healthy adult who is able to follow its severe rule and is not strictly hereditary, though children of such nobles generally enter it. To enter the order one must graduate from school and from college, must "be something" or have "done something," must be in good health and fully adult. Once in, he may not use tobacco, alcohol, or drugs; he may not speculate or sell on his own account unless some process of manufacture changes the nature of the commodity; he may not be an actor or singer; he may not be a servant or keep servants; he may not marry outside of the "woman's rule," and each year, for at least a week, he must take provisions and blanket and go into the wilderness and "go back to the stark mother" and think, to come back physically clean, mentally clean. These voluntary nobles are called samurai.

The leading principle of the Utopian religion—there is but one—is the repudiation of the doctrine of original sin. The Utopians hold that man is good as a whole. "Religion in its quintessence is a relation between God and man; it is perversion to make it a relation between man and man, and a man may no more reach God through a priest than love his wife through a priest." So there is no church in Utopia, and no minister, though any man may read books of devotion or hear music that is in harmony with his feelings.

Such is Mr. Wells's vision of a modern Utopia. It is disturbed by the spectre of "race," for in Utopia all races are on an equality—and in the world they are not. And on the race question the beautiful dream is dissolved. It seems a pity—but it is only a dream.

Millions for the King.

This is a sprightly tale of a young American girl, a dramatic student under the great Reeb of Paris, and natural heiress to all the millions of La Marquise de Brimont and her sister, Mlle. Marie Sylvie Amélie Adelaide de la Coutrée; but who, through the eccentricity of these two noble ladies, is cut off from the slightest part of their many millions. The Marquise and her sister Mademoiselle, respectively in their early eighties and late sixties, had been taught by their sainted grandmamma to expect at any moment the return of the Bourbons, and they awaited patiently the accession of Louis XIX. to the lost throne of his fathers. Their sainted grandmamma had prophesied on her deathbed that this should be so—and not only that, but she believed that the returned King should look to the house of Brimont for friendly and financial aid.

Pauline, their American grandniece, in love with Louis Duc de Monplaisir, a scion of the house of Napoleon, sees her love slip through her fingers because she is poor. But she is not the daughter of a dead land promoter and a living energetic and forceful American lady for nothing. It is at her instigation that Louis de Monplaisir masquerades as the returned Orleanist before the feeble-minded old ladies of Brimont, and so well does he enact the part of the exiled Prince, assisted, of course, by the promising young pupil of Reeb, that the wealth of the Brimonts, which had been willed to Louis XIX., seems to be ready to fall into his hands. At his instigation the old ladies even change the name in their wills from Louis XIX. to read Duc de Monplaisir, by which title he tells them his followers now call him.

That the cup which is about to be raised to his lip "slips" at the last moment is not the fault of the Duc. It is due more to the awakening of the dormant conscience of Pauline—an inheritance from her father, the land promoter, rather than from her energetic mother. This conscience makes Pauline refuse to marry the Duc, and, in the end, she marries a young American, who, in the last chapter, is discovered to be the son of a millionaire. Pauline, however, is not to be blamed for this, as she had no idea of it when she refused the Duc. The story is told with much spirit and humor, and the characters are well drawn. The Duc is a delightful rascal, and the old ladies are delightful old ladies. The whole story is delightful.

IN TOY HAWAII.

THE CHIEF FROM BORNU. A Story of Hawaiian Life. By Isabel Strong. 12mo. Pp. 297. New York: McClure, Phillips & Co.

The world knows that Hawaii was once a toy kingdom and King Kalakaua an amiable toy monarch reigned over it. This is a story of that time—a story of a girl named Florence, who went over to marry one young man and actually married another, not so young, but worth $11,000,000. There is a lively designing widow in the story and a handsome Englishman with a hyphen who keeps the royal livery stables and is deeply disapproved of by the millionaire. The fact is he carries about with him a vague air of wickedness, though beyond treading on little girls' toes when he dances and making one rather late call he doesn't do anything particularly dreadful. He falls in love with Florence, of course, and the widow doesn't like it. Also a young American naval officer falls in love with Florence. But Florence has fallen in love with the man with $11,000,000 at the very first meeting—with the man, not his millions.

The story tells how they dance on the decks of the old warships in the harbor—American, British, Russian—but the German ships are the new kind, not nice for dancing. The story tells also about Hawaiian life and how Florence lived in a bower of a room in the house of a half-breed Hawaiian lady of royal descent, how she taught two little Hawaiian Princes their lessons, how the King came to see her and made her "Painter of Rare Fishes to His Majesty," and how she made an awful mess of the only rare fish she ever tried to paint. However, the King gave a real "surf-riding party" all in her honor, and was altogether delightfully kind.

The author tells you, too, about the missionary-descended aristocracy, about the countless foreign Consuls, about a dapper Japanese Count and an imposing Chinese Mandarin, the last the father of a great many daughters, half Hawaiian, with beautiful Paris frocks. The author dwells rather lovingly upon frocks in several places, by the way, and takes a very evident delight in her Hawaiian Arcady and the day-dream life there. The worse things she lets happen are a little accident with a tandem in which nobody gets much hurt and two rather spectacular affairs with a young gentleman who is shockingly but very harmlessly drunk. You can see that she quite believes in all sorts of old-fashioned notions of love and innocence and childlike happiness.

Giotto.

GIOTTO. By Basil de Sélincourt. Crown 8vo. Illustrated. Buckram. Gilt Top. Pp. 233. In the Library of Art. New York: Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $2 net.

It is to be regretted that the meandering, characteristic tracks of the ungifted amateur are to be traced through the pages of the latest edition to the Library of Art. Compared with its immediate predecessor—T. Sturge Moore's "Albrecht Dürer"—the "Giotto" of Basil de Sélincourt is distinctly inferior. The biographical part shows, of course, more or less familiarity with Vasari's "Lives," and with the monumental work of Crowe and Cavalcaselle; but the connoisseurship lacks a familiarity with the latest and most approved authorities, and the criticism, where unconventional, is impressive only as an expression of untried emotions.

Although Mr. de Sélincourt is fond of citing from Giotto's contemporaries in Italian literature, these citations are principally employed to emphasize some self-evident fact and contribute very little to a knowledge of Giotto, the man and painter, or to his position in art or to a comprehension of the vastness and importance of his school, which ushered in the Renaissance. As a hand book to the more familiar pictures it is not to be despised, and the illustrations with which the text is embellished are of the high character of half tone plates with which readers of former volumes are familiar.

Bible Stories.

Here is a book which is exceedingly useful of its kind. ("On Holy Ground; Bible Stories with Pictures of Bible Lands." By William L. Worcester. Octavo. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Company.) It is adapted to the use of young students by scope of places and things of Biblical interest. Mr. Worcester has undertaken to interpret the stories of the Old Testament and of the New up to the Ascension. What his own remarks of the sacred Narrative, however, he has given extracts from the Scriptures themselves, so that the student, after first having had the meaning of the various passages made clear to him, can later read and study them with the proper understanding.

Stories by Maurice Hewlett.

FOUR ADVENTURES. Tales of the Youth of the World. By Maurice Hewlett. 12mo. New York: Harper & Brothers. $1.50.

These four stories of Mr. Hewlett's are as rich in imagery and as glowing in color as any that he has ever written. They are best with adventure; they throb with passion, they out through the red-blooded to their endings. Mr. Hewlett is more than generous—he is profligate in the wealth of incidents that he lavishes upon his readers. Yet, so boldly are the stories conceived, so sure and hot scented the romance, that every sentence seems to bear a vital relation to the whole and the loss of one would cause a break like the dropping of a stitch in a closely knitted pattern.

The first story, "The Heart's Key," is "set among the hill country of Toulouse." Lady Saill, daughter of Simeon of Ventadorn, was "a golden lady with long yellow hair like Helen's of Troy and of fierce face like the Siren's when she had drowned a man. * * * Round her waist was a broad girdle of gold, plates of gold riveted together with hinges, and struck with sard and emerald, of the sort they call a Heart's Key, the girdle which virgins must wear until they are wedded." Saill had fifty lovers, but it is only of four that Mr. Hewlett tells:

Three were Jauffroi of Brieux, a very noble youth, full of mettle, who made good songs; the Monk of Queele, a man of the Church, who made better, and the Viscount Ebles, a great man from Roussillon, who made no song at all unless he were fighting, and then he sang a sharp low song like the whistle of a sword in the air, which indeed was the instrument he played on better than any. As for the fourth lover, he was Guillem of Nantoil, a poor minstrel with a cropped head, neck eyes, and smooth face, whom nobody thought a lover at all, and who in his service never lifted his looks higher than Lady Saill's knee.

And the story tells how to each of them in turn Lady Saill granted some simple token, which made him think that to him alone would she deliver the Heart's Key at last. But later, when they found themselves all fools together, they vowed vengeance on so false a lady, and banded in concerted action, hounded her from her own ancestral home across the snow-laden fields of olive trees with none to care for her but Guillem, the minstrel. And following her fortunes still further, Mr. Hewlett shows how the baser dross of her nature was burned in the fierce fires of adversity, and how the pure gold that was there shone the brighter for Guillem, the minstrel, who dared at last to look higher than his lady's knee.

Capt. Brazenhead of New Canterbury Tales fame, long of nose and terrible of mien, is here, too, succoring a pair of timid lovers and at the same time helping along a little private scheme of his own, mainly by the exercise of his nimble wit and the flash of his nimbler sword.

And again he has rewoven the threads of an old Italian legend dating from before the days of Dante and Giotto. Buondelmonte de Buondelmonti had a tower in the City of Florence, and sought out Schiatta degli Uberti for the purpose of forming a friendly alliance by marriage between the two houses where friendship had not dwelt before. But fate and a slip of a girl of fifteen spoiled their well-laid plans, and because Buondelmonte saw and loved Piccarda, the daughter of Forese Donati after he was already pledged to Cunizza of the clan of the Uberti, he was set upon and murdered at the gates of Florence.

And last is the story of "The Love Chase," which tells of the soft charms of Donna Emilia Fiordispina of Lombardy, "very young, rather pale, partaking the nature of a dove," whose lovers were many and whose suitle was enigmatical. She twisted about her slim fingers the heart of that fiercest of men, Simone della Prova, called the Black Dog of Cittadella and Tyrant of Seven States; Cardinal Gonzaga and his poet secretary, young Nello Nelli, "a fair youth with a golden cloud of hair." Simone pledged himself to her when she was twelve, and then went about his business, which was the slaying of men, and for four years Emilia neither saw nor heard from him. Meanwhile came Gonzaga, seeking first to conciliate Simone, and later made the bearer of love messages to the gentle Emilia—messages which he delivered, but which he mixed generously with gifts and sweet words of his own. And lastly, held in the soft net of her charms, was Nello Nelli, caught without a struggle. Over the true love of these two hangs the Damoclean sword of Simone's wrath and Gonzaga's treachery. And when at last it falls Emilia, with her same inscrutable smile, accepts her fate, leaving it for the reader to decide whether hers was the wisdom of the serpent or the meekness of the dove.

A Story of Psychic Mystery.

THE TYRANNY OF THE DARK. By Hamlin Garland. Pp. 439. Harper & Brothers. $1.50.

Mr. Garland's new book lives up to the weirdness of its cover decoration. It is the story of a "Psychic" who has, or who believes she has, the mysterious power of communication with the world of spirits. The influence possessed by her ghostly "controls" constitutes "the tyranny of the dark," from which it is the aim of her scientist lover to wrest her forever. It is safe to assume that in regard to spiritism the author holds his hero's point of view, and it is a little difficult to determine the object of the story. One would say that Mr. Garland denies spiritual manifestation, and yet accepts as facts a series of marvelous phenomena, inexplicable upon any other theory than that of ghostly interference. At one point of the narrative it seems as though the author recognizes the existance of psychic powers, and of a mystic "fourth dimension," and is inclined to urge upon scientific minds the investigation of these things "of the dark." At another he seems to shut the door upon the occult. The astonishing events related are declared to be "within the personal experience of Mr. Garland himself." But what does he believe about them, and what does he intend his readers to believe? If not spirits, what? At times he appears to make a Svengali matter of the whole business; again his recorded facts smite that theory in the face. Upon the whole, the subject is left hanging in mid-air, with, perhaps, just one conclusion, that in the interest of sanity it is a pretty safe subject to let alone. Yet, so long as there is death in the world the great question of life must always be: "Our beloved ones, shall we meet them, and how?" In one form or another humanity must always be "building its bridge." Spiritism is but the reply to the wail:

I look for ghosts; but none will force
Their way to me: 'tis fallacy said
That there was ever intercourse
Between the living and the dead;
For surely then I should have sight
Of him I wait for day and night
With love and longings infinite.

It is with a sense of disappointment that we perceive that Mr. Garland helps us not at all with the bridge-building across the awful chasm.

Regarded as fiction simply "The Tyranny of the Dark" is too much encumbered with laborious arguments and citations. If the strange occurrences related are, in truth, facts, they would have gained in both force and fascination by being frankly so presented, with, perhaps, such elucidation as has satisfied the author's own mind. The book would be improved if divested of its fictitious form, and presented as a contribution to the documents of psychic phenomena.

That Mr. Garland has told his story well it is needless to say. Once beginning it no reader is likely to lay it aside until the end is reached. But he will close the volume with a sense of confusion, not at all sure what Mr. Garland would be at, wishing that he had given us the thesis without the fiction or the fiction without the thesis, and feeling that this incursion into the occult has but helped to make "darkness visible."

Another Volume of "Fanny Burney."

The fifth volume of the diary and letters of Mme. d'Arblay, (as edited by Charlotte Barrett,) with preface and notes by Austin Dobson, (Macmillans,) is now out. The new volume includes the letters written between 1797 and 1802. This was the time when the authoress of "Evelina" returned to her literary pursuits, after her period of service in the Queen's household. It includes the days of her living at Mickleham, with much reminiscence of the French emigrés who sheltered in England from the Terror, and includes also the record of Miss Burney's meeting with Mme. de Staël and that of her marriage to Gen. d'Arblay. It is not, therefore, the least interesting part of these delightful memoirs.

The illustrations include excellent reproductions of portraits of Elizabeth Montagu, Sir Joshua Reynolds, and Gen. d'Arblay, a map of Mickleham and its environs, and views of the famous refuge of emigrés at Juniper Hall, Mrs. Montagu's house in Portman Square, Roxbury Park, Mickleham Church, Camilla Cottage, &c.

AN AMERICAN INVASION.

Our English cousins, or elder brothers, or foster-brothers—as they, or we, may choose to designate the dwellers in the United Kingdom—have suffered at divers times and in divers ways during the past decade from nervousness as to "American invasions." At one time it was the invasion of American mechanical contrivances and American engineering enterprises that "got on their nerves." At another it was the American political machine which was supposed in some uncanny fashion to have been adopted and adapted by Mr. Chamberlain and to have aided in producing that fiscal scheme to which he is conspicuously devoted. Again it was the invasion of American buyers of pictures and books, of which the treasures of Mr. Morgan in Kensington Museum (awaiting the repeal of the ridiculous tariff charges on their importation here) are the ever-present testimony. Still again it was the American type of newspaper, with its novel modes and methods, and particularly its horrid tendency to use phrases supposed to be American, and words spelled in the manner current in America.

This last, it is to be noted, has probably excited more alarm and resentment among our English friends or relatives, that is, among those of them who write for the critical journals, than have been excited by any other intrusion from this side of the Atlantic. Take, for instance, the elision of the vowel "u" from the word hono(u)r, &c. Here, if we may be pardoned the confusion of metaphor, was the visible shibboleth by which the true-born Briton, the heir of the uncounted wealth of English tradition, tested the respectability of writers and admitted them to or excluded them from the visiting list of literature. It was in vain to contend that "honor" was the legitimate descendant of the Latin word as it was used by writers of the grade of Cicero, or to point out that the "u," which had crept in through the French, notoriously sprung from the baser colloquial speech of the Romans. The English critics would have none of it. It was as if each of them protested as to literature, no matter of what intrinsic excellence, in the words of Lovelace:

> I could not love thee, dear, so much,
> Loved I not honour more.

Lo, now, in the dawn of the twentieth century comes The London Times, conservative of the conservatives, especially in small matters, the most generally recognized leader of English journalism, with authority less questioned than that of any other, and proposes to an amazed kingdom the adoption of an American dictionary, the introduction of an American standard of spelling, of pronunciation, of usage to British households—a dictionary which shamelessly gives preference, with all that that implies, to honor over honour, and reports of the latter that it still prevails in England, thus frankly stamping it as obsolescent and doomed to disappear when the progress of enlightenment reaches that island. Nor this alone. The Times does not propose this radical innovation in an academic fashion in a mere editorial article. It proposes it as a matter of business. It wishes to sell the dictionary, and it is so confident that it will sell well on its obligation to subscribe" for one week, promising to take it back and pay all expenses if so desired. The advertisement by The Times describes the Century Dictionary in the most flattering manner. "We believe," it says, "that the book reveals, under the test not of mere inspection but of actual use, merits so great that most of the people who have had the volumes for a few days will retain them." It is "a book altogether unlike any book made by great specialists, admired by great critics; a book which we could unhesitatingly recommend you to buy."

This cannot but seem to the purists something like treason. In reality it is but an intelligent and a shrewd recognition of the inevitable change in the use of the English language. It is intelligent because the change goes on almost imperceptibly and only a student of fairly long vision can trace it. It is shrewd because it is a well-devised plan to take advantage not only of the change, but of the tendency of all English-speaking persons gradually to talk more and more nearly alike, not by sticking to old forms but by slowly adopting such of the new ones as best suit the evolution of the race.

LETTER WRITING.

Prof. Cook of one of the Chairs in English of Yale and Mr. Benham, Fellow in English of the same institution, have compiled under the title of "Specimen Letters," and Messrs. Ginn & Co. have published in a neat, thin, and portable, though hardly pocketable, twelvemo, a selection of "Epistolary Correspondence," as they used to call it in the eighteenth century. The range of the selection is unlimited, since it includes Cicero, Pliny, Tragan, Mme. de Sevigné, and Voltaire. Of these foreigners the selection looks judicious, and the translation is well and "currently" done. The other eighty-eight letters, forming both the bulk and the weight of the volume, are English or American, beginning with Addison and ending with "Ellen G. Starr."

One's first reflection is that this is a work of supererogation. Some fifteen years ago, or perhaps twenty, one W. Baptiste Scoones compiled, and the Harpers on this side of the Atlantic published, a similar but much more extensive compilation, entitled "Four Centuries of English Letters." A most worthy work it was, seeing that it involved on the part of the compiler the wading through several hundred volumes to present to the modern reader what was still alive for him, or most alive for him, in all this before unsifted chaos. And a delightful book it was, what Sir Walter Scott called Boswell, a "parlor window book," meaning a book that you could take up anywhere, read with interest, and lay down when you had anything more pressing, when, for example, your host or hostess appeared. Readers and possessors of that volume are inclined to believe that the work has been done once for all. And yet it does not appear that Prof. Cook and Mr. Benham have ever seen or heard of it. So, at least, we infer from the fact that, in a preface acknowledging a number of obligations, they do not pay the work of their predecessor "the cold tribute of a passing glance."

This is a pity, as the duplication of work always is. It would have been a perfectly legitimate undertaking to revise and amplify Scoones and bring him down to date. Many good letters, some of the best, have been published since his compilation appeared. But the present compilers have gone only to the most famous and familiar sources, whereas Scoones searched all haystacks for his needles, and, as he really knew what he was looking for, his industry was rewarded. The present compilers, in their English letters, begin with Queen Anne's time, upon the and archaic air." But if they will take the trouble to consult Scoones they will discover that some of his most valuable finds are letters of the seventeenth century and even earlier. They themselves own the value and charm of some letters preceding the period to which they have limited themselves by taking from Dorothy Osbourne a definition of the nature of a letter which might serve as the motto of their volume and the key to their method of selection. But there can really be no comparison between their work and that of their predecessor, to which theirs yields in value and interest in quite as great a proportion as that in which it is inferior in bulk. No judicious person who had his choice of the two compilations would hesitate to prefer the earlier.

What a pity! Because, as an avowed supplement to Scoones, such of their work as he has not anticipated would have a distinct value. For the sake of this supplementary matter the possessor of Scoones's book may very well desire to possess theirs also, while to the reader who has not Scoones their book is very well worth having as perhaps the best that can now be got. As we have been saying, the art of letter writing did not die out, "as certain Anabaptists do vainly talk," when distances were lessened and cheap postage came in. But it is true that the modern man, to write as good letters as the ancients of the eighteenth century, must be subjected to their conditions. He must be remote, unfriended, melancholy, and, in the sense of having abundant leisure, slow. When he has also a literary turn and a turn for friendship his letters may be as good as any letters ever were. Witness Stevenson in Samoa, than whom a more complete and entertaining letter writer never was in English. To the unhappy who do not already know Stevenson's letters, if such there be, this volume is very well worth having for them alone. Since it is also worth having by those who have not Scoones, and by those who have Scoones, the combination of the three classes makes up a public equal to the wildest dreams of the compilers and publishers of "Specimen Letters."

Mr. Howells's New Book.

The title of Mr. Howells's new story, preliminary announcement of which was made in THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW two weeks ago, is "Miss Bellard's Inspiration," and the Harpers will publish the book next week. It appears from further revelations of the nature of the story that it involves the case of a young woman who, while she hesitates to take or leave a suitor for her hand, studies the practical aspects of achieved matrimony as they appear in the lives of two couples who are staying in the same house with her in the New Hampshire hills. One pair is devoted and middle aged, the other is made up of two persons "on the verge of separation for no other reason than that they are too much in love with each other." By the way, the suitor—an Englishman—is staying close at hand to watch and assist in the weighing process. They say the end is "perfectly satisfactory."

Robert Herrick's Poems.

The poetical writings of Robert Herrick have been added to the Caxton Thin Paper Series, (small foolscap 8vo, pp. 472, limp lambskin, gilt top, New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, $1.25.) The volume includes the "Hesperides, or Works Both Humane and Divine," in which the poet writes of birds, flowers, love, the months of the year, heaven, &c., and his "Noble Numbers," or pious pieces, in which, among other things, he speaks of "the birth of his Christ and sighs for his Saviour's suffering on the cross." There is a photogravure frontispiece portrait of Herrick and a decorated title page on Japanese vellum. The book is printed in large, clear type on thin opaque paper.

The John Lane Company.

Mr. John Lane of the Bodley Head sailed for Liverpool on the Baltic this week, after an unusually long absence from his London office in Vigo Street. During his stay in New York he incorporated the American branch of his English publishing business under the style of the John Lane Company. Mr. Rutger Bleecker Jewett is managing Director, while Mr. Robert W. De Forest and Mr. Acosta Nichols of the banking house of Spencer Trask & Co. are Directors.

THE perfected man, when Nature evolves him, will have a perfect memory. The human memory, in the present stage of evolution, is a rudimentary not to say a pitiful thing. Man remembers just enough of what he has done and heard, read, seen, and said to indicate what his memory might be if the use of it were properly developed. It seems a strange freak of nature, until we ponder over it a little, that men with the best memories are frequently shallow-minded, while a giant of intellect has been known to forget the name of the street he dwelt in. The simple explanation is that the memory is as uncultivated in one case as in the other, while the simpleton who remembers so much uses his brain for no other purpose to speak of. Probably the memory in every normal person is the same, while it is the most neglected of all human gifts.

Robert Houdin, the French magician, and his son, in preparing their remarkable exhibition called "Second Sight," (which, of course, was an intentional misnomer,) used to walk through the Paris streets and glance in the shop windows, endeavoring to remember and name the articles exposed to view. After long practice they found they could remember the names and positions of every article in a crowded show window. Having thus begun to train their rudimentary powers of remembrance, they constructed their remarkable code of signals, variants of common words and phrases, inflections, tricks of emphasis, inarticulate sounds, pauses, and the like, by the use of which the performer, walking among the spectators and taking articles at random from them, could communicate with his blindfolded assistant on the platform, who would name and describe each article and tell the dates of coins, thus convincing the astonished crowd that he and his principal possessed occult powers.

In the remembrance of the present generation Robert Heller and his sister have performed this simple trick to perfection. Mr. Kellar now does it very well. It is all very easy when it has been mastered. The trick is all in remembering. There are, for instance, only nine figures and a cipher, and the date of a coin is easily communicated by the simple code, especially as coins of earlier date than the sixteenth century are very rare.

All our memories are capable of much more than that. It has been the idea of many philosophical writers that the mind never loses what it once apprehends. The man of the distant future will remember distinctly every strain of music, every combination of words, every harmony of color, every aspect of nature, every thought, every smile, every frown that his experience comprehends. In the wisdom of his golden age we may be sure there will be few dull, foul, and trivial things to burden the memory.

B. F. Austin of Rochester, N. Y., is the author of a little work on "Rational Memory Training," the fifth edition of which, in pamphlet form, has just reached us with the imprint of the Austin Publishing Company of Rochester. This contains a deal of matter, original and selected, relating to the memory, including impressive anecdotes of Lord Macaulay and Magliabechi, which is pertinent enough but not absolutely essential. It is, in fact, a sort of rambling essay on the memory and the elusive science of mnemonics in which we have found much interesting reading.

As for systems of mnemonics in general we infer that Mr. Austin does not think much of them. He does not care much for systems which teach you to remember one thing by remembering several other unessential things, yet the association of ideas is frequently a useful help to the memory. Mr. Austin, however, insists upon a natural association of ideas. His "rational method" includes a daily exercise of the memory. He offers to the man or woman with a bad memory no easy method of transforming it into a good memory. He has not turned out a treatise on "How to Learn to Remember Everything in Six Predigested Lessons." But his little book is full of good advice and practical suggestions. It is calculated to awaken a new reverence for the fair goddess of the Greeks, Mnemosyne.

Mr. Francis W. Halsey lately succeeded Mr. Edward J. Wheeler as editor of The Literary Digest. Mr. Wheeler is now the editor of Current Literature. Two of his associates in his former post, Mr. Alexander Harvey and Mr. L. D. Abbott, are also on the staff of Current Literature.

Sociology.

We seek truth not merely for the pleasure of knowing, but in order to have a lamp for our feet. We toil at building sound theory in order that we may know what to do and what to avoid. Hence all the labors of social investigators finally empty into practical sociology. This branch first frames a worthy and realizable ideal, and then, availing itself of theoretical sociology, indicates what measures will so take advantage of the trend of things as to transmute the actual into the ideal.

Thus writes Prof. Edward Alsworth Ross of the University of Nebraska in his new sociological book, "Foundations of Sociology," which is appearing in The Citizens' Library through the Macmillan Company. It is mainly made up of articles that have appeared in The American Journal of Sociology, The Independent, and from addresses. It treats of the scope and task of sociology, the sociological frontier of economics, social laws, "mob mind," the social forces, the factors of social change, recent tendencies in sociology, the causes of race superiority, "The Value Rank of the American People," "The Properties of Group-Units," and "The Unit of Investigation in Sociology." A bibliography and a list of the authors cited in the text have been appended. Prof. Ross is also the author of "Social Control" and "Social Duplex."

"Alphabet of Athletics."

This is the first volume to appear through R. P. Dutton & Co. in The Pitman Series. It is by Eustace Miles, M. A., the editor of the series. The principal object of the series, writes Mr. Miles in the introduction, is to show what is normal and healthy, to suggest simple helps toward that condition, and to emphasize "fitness."

[illegible] only that fitness should be [illegible] and virtuous as well.

The aim of the author in the present volume has not been hygiene, but interest, he writes, adding:

And the main interest is that the movements may fit an ordinary boy or girl (or man or woman) for reaching a reasonable standard of success in most branches of games and athletics, and at the same time may be sufficiently like the right movements of these as to give the practicer some of the fine drive at golf, that pull for four off a full pitch, or short ball at cricket, that long drop or punt at football, that backhand shot across the court at lawn tennis, that duck and the tap on the opponent's nose at boxing, that high jump just clearing the cross bar, that left-hand volley close down the side wall at fives.

Manoeuvre Tactics.

Major J. H. V. Crowe, R. A., P. S. C., Chief Instructor, British Royal Academy, has translated from the German, "Problems in Manoeuvre Tactics, with Solutions for Officers of All Arms," by Major Hoppenstedt, of the War School at Potsdam and a well-known military writer in Germany. An idea of the scope of the book is given in the original German preface:

This book is designed to assist officers in self-instruction in manoeuvre tactics and in preparing for examinations, to provide suggestions in the drawing up of schemes for manoeuvres, field days, staff rides, and war games, and to familiarize officers with the action of the three arms when working in co-operation. The problems deal with detachments, collisions, and advance guard actions of both large and small forces, reconnoissance and the special duties of cavalry and artillery in connection therewith. A certain number of problems which have been set at staff college examinations are included. * * * The solutions are apart from the problems, as the reader is intended to work them out for himself. * * * Conciseness has been aimed at and theoretical discussions avoided.

The book is not an English fac simile of the German; Major Crowe has adapted the problems in manoeuvre tactics to the British organization. The country in which the operations take place is in the neighborhood of Metz. Four maps have been made for the volume, three of which have been placed in a pocket at the end. The Macmillan Company publishes the book.

Two Years in the Antarctic.

An account of the Swedish antarctic expedition in 1901 is being published by the Macmillan Company under the title, "Antarctica; or, Two Years Amongst the Ice of the South Pole," written by Dr. N. Otto G. Nordenskjöld, Dr. Joh. Gunnar Andersson, and C. J. Skottsberg. They tell of the journey from Sweden to Antarctica, their first days in the south pole region, their work, their discoveries, adventures, life at the different stopping places, the animals, the scenery, &c. The book is copiously illustrated from photographs, drawings, and paintings by different members of the expedition.

The Swedish expedition was fitted out by Dr. Nordenskjöld, apropos of the suggestion at the International Geographical Congress held in London in 1895. The expedition left Sweden in the Autumn of 1901 for the South Shetlands, and then went to the east coast of that then unknown and extensive land lying to the south of these islands, and penetrated further south. The expedition was divided into three parties, commanded respectively by Dr. Nordenskjöld, Dr. Andersson, and Capt. Larsen. As the author writes in closing, it is an eventful story the book tells. Between the day of the departure of the expedition from Sweden in the Antarctic, which was destroyed, until the evening when they again trod on home earth, lay "two years of perpetual Winter spent in south polar regions." He says:

The demand of science that no part of the globe shall remain untouched by the hand of investigation was the force that drew our little band to the land of the furthest south. The strife has been a severe one; more than once success has seemed to fly us, and we have suffered losses that none of us can ever forget. But in spite of everything we reached our goal; we have brought back the results of the first comprehensive researches within half a continent, and have made more unexpected discoveries than we could ever have dared to hope for.

This is the sub-title of Prof. J. Macbride Sterrett's "The Freedom of Authority," which the Macmillan Company is bringing out. The author thus explains the term "apologetics":

Apologetics is the philosophical defense or justification of religion. It aims at vindicating the concrete rationality of the religious side of humanity's life. It attempts a critical refutation of all antagonistic world-views. It meets them in the open, on purely intellectual grounds, as to what is the most rational world-view—one that excludes and invalidates religion, or one that includes and validates.

The volume is a series of "studies," Dr. Sterrett says, rather than "a sustained thesis." Through all the lectures runs "the contention that nature and man are known truly only when they [illegible] and earnestly worshipping in some form of 'authoritative religion'—in any form, rather than in no form."

There are chapters on "The Freedom of Authority," Sabatier, Harnak, Abbé Loisy, "The Historical Method," "Ecclesiastical Impediments," "Ethics of Creed Conformity," "The Ground of Certitude in Religion," and "Ultimate Ground of Authority."

Evolution of Russia.

In his history of Muscovite civilization and the rise of modern Russia under Peter the Great and his forerunners, "The First Romanovs, (1613-1725,)" R. Nisbet Bain has endeavored to describe the social, ecclesiastical, and political conditions of Eastern Europe from 1613 to 1725, and trace the gradual transformation, during the seventeenth century, of the "semi-monastic, semi-barbarous" Czardom of Muscovy into the modern Russian State. Peter the Great has been treated of not biographically, but historically. The author writes:

He is regarded, primarily, as the last and greatest of a series of native pioneers who lightened his task by preparing the way for him—men like Ordulin-Nashchokin, Artamon, * * * and Vasily Golitsuin—all of whom in their degree * * * contributed to lay the foundations of modern Russia. * * * But no detail, however trivial, which can explain the policy or illuminate the character of the first Russian Emperor has been omitted.

It is "an indisputable historical fact," he adds, that Russia owes "everything" to the Czars—"her prosperity, her greatness, her empire, her very existence." Mr. Bain speaks of the period of which he treats:

Like all periods of sudden transition, the century which divides the age of Ivan the Great from the age of Peter the Great has its own peculiar interest, abounding, as it does, in singular contradictions and picturesque contrasts. Throughout this period, East and West, savagery and civilization strive incessantly for the mastery, and sinister and colossal shapes, fit representatives of wildly contending elemental forces, flit phantasmagorically across the dirty ways of the twilight scene. * * * This seventeenth century in Muscovy is also one of the most important periods of modern European history, for, explored with intelligence and patience, it can be made to yield up the deep-lying explanations of many things that trouble or bewilder us in the Czar's domains to-day, e. g., the backwardness of the people, the veneration for the throne, the venality and inefficiency of the public service, the vices and the failures, the ambitions and the exploits of Holy Russia. Finally, the subject possesses the rare and crowning merit of almost absolute novelty.

The illustrations include portraits of some of Russia's rulers during the seventeenth century and a plan of the City of Moscow at that time. The volume bears the imprint of E. P. Dutton & Co.

"Middle" English.

The Macmillan Company is issuing "A Middle English Reader," edited by Prof. Oliver F. Emerson of the Western Reserve University, who has provided also a grammatical introduction, full and copious notes, and an exhaustive glossary. The volume is intended, we are told, to serve as an introduction to the language and literature of the period called Middle English; that is, the centuries between 1100 and 1500. The introduction is based on lectures to students beginning the study of Middle English; the selections have been arranged on the basis of the great dialectal divisions of the language during the period—the Midland dialect, the dialects of the north, south, and the City of London, Kentish, Old Irish, Old Danish, &c.—and accompanied by explanatory notes, while the glossary, besides giving the meanings of the different words, accounts for the forms of words on the basis of the dialectal differences in Old and Middle English. Such information concerning each selection, as, what is known of the manuscript, its date, author, place of composition, &c., is given, as well as explanations in points of grammar, history, life of the times, &c.

Naturalism in Poetry.

Naturalism as an intellectual tendency in England makes its appearance in Wordsworth in the form of love of all the external phenomena of nature. * * * In Coleridge, and even more in Southey, it approaches the German romanticism of the day. * * * In Scott, naturalism occupies itself with the character and history of a whole nation, and in vivid colors paints man as the son of a race and a period; in Keats, it takes possession of the whole world of the senses. * * * In Moore, it becomes erotic. * * * In Campbell, it becomes eulogy of England as Queen of the Sea and expression of English liberal views. In Landor, it takes the shape of pagan humanism. * * * It is transformed in Shelley into a soulful love of nature and a poetic radicalism. * * * Then, like Achilles arising in his wrath after he has burned the body of Patroclus, Byron, after Shelley's death, arises and lifts up his mighty voice. * * * In Byron's poetry the river boiled and foamed, and the roar of its waters made music that mounted up to heaven. * * * It presaged better days for Europe.

In this manner Georg Brandes sums up his volume on "Naturalism in England, (1875,)" the fourth of his work on "Main Currents in Nineteenth Century Literature," which will be complete in six books, bearing the imprint of the Macmillan Company. There are chapters in this volume on the "common" characteristics of the period, the English "national" characteristics, the beginnings of "naturalism," ruralistic romanticism, the most dissimilar types, sometimes not merely unlike, but antagonistic to, each other."

Books That Sell Well.

Doubleday, Page & Co. have just printed the third large edition of Perceval Landon's "The Opening of Tibet," and a second edition of Leroy Scott's "The Walking Delegate."

The Macmillan Company announces that Foxcroft Davis's novel of social and political life at Washington, "Mrs. Darrell," went into a second edition three days after publication.

Dodd, Mead & Co. report the fifth edition of the Baroness von Hutten's latest novel, "Pam," and that Charles Carey's detective story, "The Van Suyden Sapphires," is also selling well.

Thomas Whittaker is publishing new editions of "Blessed Are Ye," a popular treatise on the Beatitudes by the Rev. Dr. F. B. Meyer of London, and "The Church Before the Court of Reason," by the Rev. Dr. Edmund Guilbert of Southport, Conn.

McClure, Phillips & Co. have had to print for the second time Booth Tarkington's new book, "The Beautiful Lady," before the date of publication.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co. report the following new printings: Fifth edition of "The Opal," the anonymous society novel; sixth edition of "Our Country's Story," by Eva March Tappan, and second edition of Charles S. Sargent's "Manual of Trees."

THE PUBLISHER'S POINT OF VIEW.

IN the olden days, very nearly all the important books were published in the Fall, and a few held over for the Spring.

Our plan has gradually been working out to publish pretty much the entire year——even in the so-called "dullest season," and it is to be hoped that we have selected a fortunate day (May 27th) to issue four new books for which we expect success.

THE LIFE WORTH LIVING.
By Thomas Dixon, Jr.

The author of "The Clansman" and "The Leopard's Spots" has gone into a new field. He recounts the experiences of a home-maker in city, suburb and country—ending on a beautiful estate in Virginia which cost about the same as "nineteen feet of scorched mud in New York." 32 full-page illustrations. Net, $1.20. (Postage 12c.).

FAIRY TALES EVERY CHILD SHOULD KNOW.
Edited by Hamilton W. Mabie.

The success of "Poems That Every Child Should Know," which has been adopted in schools and accepted everywhere, led to the preparation of this volume, which should be quite as popular. Decorations by Miss Ostertag. 90 cents Net. (Postage 9 cents).

THE LITTLE CONSCRIPT.
By Ezra S. Brudno.

Discriminating readers will remember the author's story "The Fugitive," a remarkable transcript of the life of a Jew in Russia. In this book he tells the life of a young man drafted into the Russian army, a timely subject and an absorbing story. ($1.50).

JOHN HENRY SMITH.
By Frederick Upham Adams,
Author of "John Bart" and "The Kidnapped Millionaires"

This is an amusing novel, illustrated by A. B. Frost in imitation of the pictures which the hero of the novel—Mr. Smith—would supposedly have made to illustrate his own story. It has much to do with golfing and automobiling. ($1.50).

PROOFREADERS.

New York Times Book Review:

IN a recent number of your paper I asked to be told "where I was at." I asked to be placed like a fly on a pin, accompanied by the proper label, in order that I might, on being interrogated, give forth the proper answer. I have it now! In other words, I know now! I am a drab-colored American moth that is flying about a dazzling and begemmed candlestick intricately carved, all filigree and gold, in the central cup of which reposes a cleverly molded candle fashioned out of the worst of waxy refuse and colored with the commonest of aniline materials. I know, too, now, that the candle burns with a pale, sickly light, which is blue and fascinating, reminiscent of a jack o' lantern creeping over an ivy-covered grave, followed by a general phosphorescence resultant to the decaying (or decadence) of a body or the clammy nothingness of a spectral form.

Yes, I am flying about this flame. I can remember now as I flew toward this flame of evil I met a moth coming out (a European species) whose wings still smelled of the late contact they had had.

"Turn, brother," said this moth, "thine eyes are too weak to behold and thy wings not strong enough to stand the strain. Turn, I beseech thee!"

"Brother," said I, "I thank thee and will return thy favor. As thou wilt fly without I pray thee beware of something lately spread to catch the common fly, and known, brother, as fly paper. It is thickly covered with the sticky, viscid stuff formed of the ingredients of the historical novel, the 'popular over a night' romance, the Wall Street's biography, the dialect novel, the villain dies a victim of a 'righteous virtue to the top' heroine species, the religious book, the olden-time swashbuckler, the legal novel, the war novel, the society novel, and which happily is mixed up with a little sweetening which is made by a set of individuals who say patronizingly:

"'Wherever we speak of immorality or evil we will pleasantly mark it, so that all good people will not mix evil up with good, and thereby sin and be made unhappy.' The sweetening draws great hordes of flies—they come in twenty editions and a half million readers—who read and intellectually buzz themselves into a sordid oblivion.

"So, brother, fly warily, lest thou lightest upon some tanglefoot and the flies call thee popular; but who wants his dirge sung by a lot of droning, dying, dizzy, duped, deluded flies?"

For a flame kills, and perhaps Henry James has been the downfall of some man who brought the first French cancer he met was a duplicate of Mme. de Vionnet in "The Ambassadors."

But, oh! the countless thousands that have been sent to a dusty death following false standards of conduct fashioned by novel writers who had their heroes and heroines made of such superior stuff that anything short of an "Immortal" would have declined to play the parts were they eventually dramatized. Women, mothers, there are who send their daughters on their honeymoons believing that marriage is a Summer sea on which they will sail in a lovely, chastely carved boat. No wonder girls' hearts are broken. Yes, the mother was a well-meaning woman, but that doesn't mend a heart.

No novelist can hope for deathless fame in this age unless he faithfully portrays the mental phase accurately. Dickens portrayed the every-day workings of men and women with an unerring fidelity. They rallied against him at the time for throwing mud at the established order. Just so slavery was once practiced by those of "trained and judicial" minds, and the few who opposed it were shouted down by the elect. To-day there are mental crimes to expose and punish. Fagins in the minds, not bodies. We have evolved beyond Dickens, George Eliot, and Scott, charming as they are. Men and women who write to reach the front ranks in the procession must depict every phase of a character or step down and out, hissed from the stage. A novel that chows not the character sinning, (and every one of us sins,) as well as clothed in our better robes, is false. There is a cry against one-sided biography now. Some day it, too, will have to present sin as well as goodness. We all know a novel should only be a series of intricately embroidered and correctly stated biographies. We cry out for frankness? Do we really want it—in our friends, in ourselves, or in those that write for us?

To express the mind's doings one has to be clever. And great truths are always intricate, else why would it be necessary for theologians to wrangle over Christ's sayings? A good thing, a simple thing, is always paradoxically clever and brilliant, and nearly always is pronounced either evil, immoral, or a failure until it is understood. Joan of Arc was lately canonized. Wagner is just being born to the world. The next century will be the one to know that Henry James was not immoral in his writings. Why are we always looking for the evidences of the "Decameron" or the "Ribaldry" in every clever thing we read? Isn't it a low aim? Why, to hear the way the wind blows at times one almost looks to hear that wise Henry James' critics used Balzac he means only the "Droll Stories."

James Lane Allen, in "The Mettle of the Pasture," asked that we young Americans try for a better moral plane as the mettle of our National trait. Let us pray it will come through knowledge, not fear, like the two little boys, one of whom touched not the tart jelly because of fate of his mother's law, while the other didn't because he said he had tasted the jelly, and while he could eat it there were lots of other things in the pantry he wanted more. Some of us won't read books because of the evil in them—the laws will break if we read them, while others pick up and enjoy them, never looking for the suggestion of evil, because, after all, it is only tart jelly, and in the bookish pantry there are so many other things. I hope we Americans will make of our literature just what we have made of our National ball game, the cleanest, finest, cleverest game in the world. You can be offended at a ball game, but if you're normal you won't.

This sniffing of the air for evil, this perceiving of a malappropriation of the temples of the mind and body in the lives of all the new characters in our fiction, is the very force that is impoverishing the strength of its blood and thinning its corpuscles. For a character in fiction is worse off than a real one in life; it can't even prove an alibi. How can a man call himself an optimist and at the same time believe high mentalities soar only for the lowest of aims, to sneer, and that they fly toward the most commonplace goal of life, an astigmatic perceiving and viewing of the laws that govern propagation of species. Every phase of life knows about every conceivable method of breaking the "social law," and why great novelists should think of writing novels to gratify their propensities to sneer, (a thing any schoolboy does at the self-same thing,) and at the same time present in a dazzling, bewildering way one of the commonly things that happen, is beyond me to for a moment entertain.

Go into the amphitheatre of a first-class medical school during a surgical clinic. Exposed to the view of a couple of hundred men may be the poor, tired body of some frail woman of the streets undergoing a critical operation, for which happily she will be charged nothing that shall deplete her slender purse. Are those students spoiled or rendered coarse by that sight? Are they making ribald jests or vulgar remarks? Are they having their moral edge dulled? No, they are not. It is part of life that they should see and do these things, and, strange to say, while that very woman may figure in the downfall of one of them a month later, she is nothing but a source of help and strength to them to-day, albeit not without suffering and exposure. Why can't we Americans be that way with literature? Why can't we have the mettle of the pasture in us to look on life dissected and realise that it is for our proficiency and our good? Ah, why can't we be superior to this looking for evil?

Is a delicate dissector like Edith Wharton acting "The Sanctuary" to scoff at? Is Henry James writing about that loveliest of all women, Milly Theale, in order to pollute us young Americans? The holiest of mother's loves was never more beautifully depicted from any pulpit in the land than in "The Sanctuary." The greatest of martyrdoms in literature, that of Milly Theale, who laid down her life for her friend, was meant to be a lovely imitation of Christ by a dear, delicate American girl, who counted her own as nothing. Perhaps we read these things too fast at times, perhaps we approach them to be amused, perhaps only to criticise, perhaps only to say we can read them. Anyway, if their authors wrote them flippantly, and we can in the reading extract beauty, why are we not to do it? It may be some of the disciples coddled as they wrote, but still God's hand made the result perfect. I say this, if James, Wharton, and their disciples be decadents, then may I join the choir invisible that sings where they will sing in a lovely, chastely carved boat. No wonder girls' hearts are broken. Yes, the mother was a well-meaning woman, but that doesn't mend a heart.

HARRY M. HALL.

Wheeling, West Va., May 24, 1905.

Georg Brandes.

New York Times Book Review:

In his eagerness to defend Georg Brandes your correspondent "R." in last Saturday's BOOK REVIEW, seems to overlook the fact that he is aiding instead of refuting my argument. For instance, I mentioned only two of the leading insidious influences in European literature, he mentions in his two first paragraphs about a dozen.

But far be it from me to have intended an attack on the Jewish race. I maintain that Moritz Cohen (or Maurice by his own preference, I presume, from his slavish adoration of everything French) is Brandes's real name, being informed by a Jew that only such name is recognized according to their customs or religion. What I had in my mind, but tried to suppress as far as possible in my expressions, was my dread of the renegade influence, and my disapproval of the concealing of race, my only complaint against the Jewish race being that it furnishes such an abundance of brains, which, chiefly by reason of renegadism, the abandoning of their own religion without adopting any other, is led into wrong channels, becoming a very dangerous and undermining influence.

Taking up the second point in "R.'s" defense, I confess that I may have made my statement too sweeping in saying that Brandes denounces "all" moral authors, &c. But, just as Brandes and Nordau attack each other, (I am well aware of Brandes's attacks on Nordau, though I have long since ceased to read Nordau's books,) here am I attacking Brandes, being all the time very conscious of having myself his very fault of making too general and sweeping and unreliable statements. But I have also before confessed to having been a pupil in his school.

Nevertheless, without refreshing my recollections on the point, I will venture a vouch that if I were to take up in Count Georg Brandes's admirable work the author's enumerated by exception by "R." I would be able to prove that his exposition has been very pointed in spite of their religious principles, so far as they have shown any, and quite often accompanied by such a fine feature in their works. And, if masterpieces must be dragged in, surely no one ever pinned for him sufficient religious principles to offend an infidel.

There is no use in going a century back for our standards of the moral or immoral in literature, nor to refer to a "Krobenlechiches." Bigotry makes them perhaps more rigid then, but I claim they are higher now. In any event, American literature or the American public has no need of any of the authors defended; and again, those authors have no possible comparison with the particular authors defended by Brandes, in respect to whom only I used the adjective shocking. ("R." in his eagerness misquotes me badly.)

Of course Brandes meant that the charge was an unjust one? But who else, in his sound senses, knowing that literature, will say it was?

"R.'s" instances of American authors and their critics are also too far-fetched. I am referring to the literature of to-day, the literature in the making which promises to be something Europe could never produce. Look well into European literature for a century past for a man; author or hero, of the type of President Roosevelt! Look well into European art for an artist of the type of Frederic Remington! I defy any one to point out a single true and manly man in all the clique of Georg Brandes, as enumerated by "R.," excepting only Björnstjerne Björnson.

To conclude, I am glad that "R." joins me in condemning Max Nordau, since, unfortunately, as I said, I have observed that there are Americans who have taken him seriously. To me he was dangerous only because of being nimble and amusing in his earlier books. Brandes certainly does stir one to love of liberty, (much-abused word;) but I submit to all Times readers the question whether he strengthens or undermines one's moral courage and manly qualities.

Obscure Allusions.

New York Times Book Review:

Those who have taken up the cudgels with or against Mr. James Mott have looked at his well-rounded tirade too superficially. I believe he did not fire his shot without an aim, which was the great incubus on that literature we who esteem our country foremost in many excellences and desire it so in all, all wish for. Allusions, clear or obscure, similes, quotations, and the like are the ponderous armor that are enjoined to wear when we sit down to compose—calculated to compose one, eh? Where was Balzac to don the loose monastic gown, Dumas to put on a coat out at the elbows, or Thackeray the dingy dressing gown. We are still the slaves and yoke-chafed ones—of the English school, and ape the New England one, for it is not a new English one, alas! How laughable when the cockney lady deigns to praise the Motley or Prescott who writes like Scott, ("Life of Napoleon," to wit.) Writing like Scott damned our first historical novels—study Simms. Writing like James (Oh, G. P. R. J., by your leave he is the great "James the Greater" in England, in the reading rooms, by your leave) killed the Ledger by the "Professor" stories so much preferable to that un-English Cobb—and fatal; writing like Knowles (yes, a model in his season) killed "Spartacus," "The Bondman," and even "Metamora." If Cornelius Mathews had written in the English style Dickens would not have found our echo to his, globeting him as Puffer Hopkins did his "Chanticleer" (C. M.'s, not C. D.'s) would be a classic to be read publicly on Thanksgiving Day. Why, all the Boston clique is English. Bigelow is only a Sussex or Norfolk dialect, and not American of the soil, in tone, allusions, diction, and references.

Do you know the Down East Mistral has published some scores of native poets? I warrant that they are so native that not one of their volumes but has a side step toward our alien friend the nightingale. Now, who in America, of the Americans, I might say in all creation, ever saw and heard a nightingale? In England tourists crush, and on the Brooklyn Bridge, to go on the excursion down into this country to hear a nightingale; it is advertised, as "The King will open the Misses Prymm's needlework bazaar." Do they hear anything? They may hear something, but the effigy would be entitled to Eden Musée honors who saw it. If anything be heard noticeable musically, it is "made in Switzerland." The wise say it is a myth gotten up for the hotel and railroad managers. Yet the writer, after long years, did see and hear one—perhaps, alackaday, the one! It is of the phoenix persuasion, who knows but it is the rara avis Mr. Mott will overlook as obscure—not obscure, though! It came under my window unannounced, sang, and went without a "tip," which proves its rarity also; but never have I dared to refer to the Philomel. Not that I have not longed to introduce the tongue-slit Athenian Princess as an allusion. Still, what novel of our day and place has not the hero hunting with the apt likening of his beloved at the piazza to Philomela, without any wonder that the male bird should have a feminine name?

Our submissiveness is to blame for this jogging on in the old English rut. The grandsons of Franklin, who would wear gray homespun in Louis's Court, sport knee-shorts and buckled pumps at "dear St. Jeames's" to-day. Look at our school readers, as well after as before the alien branch houses took a hand at that rhyming game. Two models are they, parts English, and of the age of Steele. Our teachers yearn for a holiday, to walk through Hyde Park, Regent Street, the school is out!—to visit up the classic air. As our one poet had to have Pallas over cold steady Conway—to be sure, with spectacles on, (oh, night! optimist for kindly petition the New England schoolmaster—so our halls of learning cherish Ball in vain—or the Boston cast. Our lover, warm you talk them out at the Jurgen-ized place, say not know the local name of wild flowers, but they do the Fork or Wordsworth; Stobenlegg Rocks they call epic pirate, but they would play duck on the rocks with the hallowed stones of Plymouth Point; they wear Oxford ties, and do not know what the old fogy means in depicting the comfort of Congress gaiters. Our student reiterates the duel with dulled swords on a padded man in a Heidelberg fencing hall, while a Texas bout with the genuine Bowie, or even the Barlow, is a Homeric slaughter to that burlesque; the novelist wants our plaudits for his hero's deft handling of the four-in-hand whip on the Speedway, when no Englishman could trail after an American who had learned the latest salt its use with up-to-th addenda. We talk of Americanizing the invading Foreign Legion. Oh, the mote and the beam—but that is not an obscure allusion. I devoutly hope—we withhold ourselves—we forbid our sons to be Americanized!

But we must not write averse from the recognized style. We shall not be recognized in England by the Dons and the bulldogs of the collegiate institutions, unless we lie down in their bed. They wanted Forrest and McCullough to "tame down," and not roar so the gods would call for them to roar again. Poor little Lotta, the once irrepressible, they cowed her so that she was an inaudible "stick," and Artemus Ward, he was supplied with a cockney interpreter at his elbow, intermediary for the parturition of the Anglicanly chastened American joke. An artist of our shores cannot hang in the National Gallery unless after a Bayswater fixing bath. Whistler was not appreciated till he destroyed all the clarity of his open-faced drawings by a plunge in London fog.

The fact is, we are all under the hierarchy, like the Egyptians. The learned who have the arcana they want to write so that only their pupils, their sisters, aunts, and cousins, shall be able to read.

Schiller's Translators.

New York Times Book Review:

In your admirable criticisms on "Schiller" during his centenary two weeks ago, so nobly celebrated by our German Americans, you alluded to Bulwer Lytton's translations and some other as if they were the ne plus ultra, &c. I happen to have Longfellow's opinion, through his brother "Alec" that the unfortunate poet James Clarence Mangan was the happiest of all Schiller's translators, and in fact of German anthology generally, from Bodmer to "The Midnight Review" by Count von de Sédillez. For hazard, I extract a part of Mangan's translation of Schiller's "To My Friends" and leave it to the poetic ear and insight of your readers if you parallel it with any other translations (fourth stanza):

The beggar at St. Angelo's might gaze
With scorn upon our North, for he surveys
The one lone, only, ever-living Rome.
All shapes of beauty fascinate his eye.
He sees a brilliant heaven below the sky
Shine in St. Peter's wonder-waking dome.
But even when beaming with celestial glory
Rome is the grave of long-departed years.
It is the green young plant, and not the hoary,
And time-worn trunk, that blooms and cheers.

Legends of Beasts and Flowers.

These stories, if their brevity permits them to be called such, cover all sorts of odds and ends of legend, fables, and bits of verse.

"Most boys," says Mr. Seton in his "Foreword," "gather in the woods pretty and odd bits of moss, fungus, and other treasures that have no price. They bring them home and store them in that universal receptacle, the tackle box. Some boys, like myself, never outgrow the habit. One day a friend observed that my tackle box was full and suggested that a selection be given to the public. Most of this booty I gathered in the woods myself, but an Indian gave me fragments of 'The Recipe' and 'Gitch-e O-kok-o-hoo' and a Chinaman told me where to find 'The Frog in the Well.'"

There is a little fable called "The Collector of Lies," which tells how out of all the tattle and lies of the world history springs; there is a terse comment on the stupidity of a land crab, which would not deviate one hair's breadth from its path; there is an allegory dealing with the trolley car and the steam engine; there is a warning against the foolishness of the antelope; there is a story of the sheep, whose master's love was misunderstood; there is a little poem telling how the dogwood's spotless white was burned at the edges; there is a pretty Indian song to the seasons; there are illustrated limericks; there is a story of the coming of the first bluebird—in fact, this little volume is filled with pretty little suggestions which children will not only like, but which it will be good for them to read.

It is a pity that Mr. Seton should have picked it out his book in red ink! The artistic effect would scarcely have been marred and the reading would have been undoubtedly simpler and easier in clear black type.

BOSTON NOTES.

A New Book by Pansy—E. Phillips Oppenheim's Novel—Some New Volumes of Poetry.

THERE are sixty of the Pansy books written by Pansy's own unassisted pen, seven were written in collaboration, and a little company of confessed novels, but there are no signs of weariness in "David Ransom's Watch," her latest work, to be published to-morrow by the Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Company. Indeed, it has the best plot that she has ever devised, for not only does the evil that the characters do return to plague them, but good deeds also bring their blessing, and that is no easy matter to manage in a story. Two threads of self-sacrifice run through the tale to meet at last, making ideal happiness for a little group, from which all the unpleasant folk have been eliminated by chances which the unregenerate reader will call blessed. The constant miracle of answered prayer, or happy coincidence, as one pleases; the real mercy concealed by apparent misfortune; the sure return of the bread cast upon the waters are taught by delicate touches instead of by the old fashion of knock-down blows. Altogether, the good deacons of forty years ago would hardly recognise the story as a Sunday school book, for the teaching is fitted to the Sunday school graduate of to-day, the girl who has risen above that Chautauqua which once seemed a height, and takes a collegiate education as a matter of course. Between the oldest and the newest "Pansy" book lies the popular history of the higher education for girls.

After an author has written half a score of tales of Court intrigue one expects that the next half score will resemble them, but Mr. E. Phillips Oppenheim's "The Master Mummer" will be found novel, because its author has taken a hint from the recent history of a certain royal family and has imagined what may possibly follow an elopement which for a time occupied the attention of Europe and America. Moreover, he has discovered an original beginning and has made his hero a novelist, thus giving himself an opportunity to exhibit the ways of the literary man. By these means he has produced a book which reserves a surprise for its very last chapter, although its most startling incident takes place at the outset of the tale. The book is to be published by Messrs. Little, Brown & Co.

Mr. Richard G. Badger is reissuing some of the volumes of verse published last Winter as The Arcadian Library, a series in paper covers, to be sold at 10 cents apiece, making contemporary verse as cheap as English classics. Among his new books are Mr. W. J. Henderson's "Pipes and Timbrels," a volume by Mr. Aloysius Coll, with the title "The Harem," unaccountable except on the rule laid down by the Latin grammar that names of poems are feminine; and "Myrtle and Myrrh," by Mr. Ameen Rihani, a young Syrian who found American life impossible, and has returned to his native land, leaving this book behind him; it has a most amazingly Oriental preface, of which the phrase "the amyelencephalic discourses of a pundit" is a fair specimen. For Autumn production Mr. Badger has a volume by Mr. Georg Henschel, founded upon the diary kept during his long intimacy with the late Johannes Brahms. The book will contain letters received from the composer and never before published.

Next week Mr. Badger will issue "The Voice of Equality," by Mr. Edwin Arnold Brenholz, who gives equality a voice expressing itself somewhat after the manner of the late Mr. Walt Whitman in verses varying from one to fifteen lines in length. With this will come "Stray Leaves from a Soul's Book," by one who calls himself "I of the Dual Soul." The "Leaves" are twelve, and their inscriptions are partly rhapsodical, partly stories of the dual soul's past, of the bronze age, the viking times, and of the French Revolution.

Messrs. L. C. Page & Co. are preparing a set of very pretty volumes appropriately called the Leicester Library, not because they suggest Mrs. Leicester's School, or Elizabeth's Leicester, but because their association is so eccentric as to remind one of the town to which British oddities appear to gravitate. This is the list of the books to appear in green limp lambskin with green and black title pages, photogravure portraits for frontispiece, good pictures, and the text printed on special thin paper at the same price as the current novel, "The Autocrat of the Breakfast Table," Dickens's "Christmas Books and Stories," "The Decameron," "The Cloister and the Hearth," Mrs. Jameson's "Legends of the Monastic," Leigh Hunt's "The Town of London," Hamilton's "Memoirs of the Comte de Grammont," Darwin "On the Origin of Species," Mme. Campari's "Memoirs of Marie Antoinette," Sheridan's plays, and "Thoughts from Montaigne," selected by Constance, Countess de la Warr, with a biographical study and a foreword by Mr. Egerton Castle. Surely something for all tastes may be found there!

In addition to Mr. Benson's "The Valkyries" and Mr. Baring Gould's "Siegfried," mentioned last week, the "Lohengrin" of the latter authors will be reprinted, and all will appear in the Music Lovers' Series, in the place of the volumes of biographical or critical essays hitherto included in it.

In the Travel Lovers' Series, the volumes to be added in the Autumn are those upon which Mr. Mansfield and his wife, formerly Miss Blanche McManus, have been engaged during the last year, "Rambles in Normandy" and "Rambles in Brittany." The natural beauties of both provinces, their picturesque ancient buildings, and the survivals of the past in costume, vehicles, and local customs furnish excellent subjects for pen and for pencil, and the volumes promise better than the Cathedral Series, which, good although the books were, did not appeal to all readers.

STEPHENSON BROWNE.

Boston, May 26, 1905.

An Old-Fashioned Indian Tale.

SILVER BELLS. By Lieut. Col. Andrew Haggard, D. S. O., author of "Hannibal's Daughter," "Sporting Yarns," "Sidelights on the Court of France," &c. With a frontispiece by Charles Livingston Bull. 12mo. Pp. 357. Boston: L. C. Page & Co. $1.50.

Col. Haggard has gone back to Fenimore Cooper for his model in this story. But it is a hundred years too late for that sort of thing—and the Colonel is no novelist. Yet his language is at least as stilted as that of the author of the famous Leather Stocking Tales, his characters are as near as impossibly stiff, and his adventures as hair-raising, though he has no Indian wars to fill the pages with blood and the air with shrieks.

The Colonel's hero is one Geoffrey Digby, son of a Norfolk squire, who, being jilted by a girl, betakes himself to the wilds of Canada and dwells among the Indians. These for his deeds of prowess in the chase name him "Ready Rifle," and a lovely maid among them (called Silver Bells) falls abjectly in love with him. However, on the voyage to Canada there is a shipwreck, wherein the hero saves the Lady Geraldine McGeorge, whose husband is an elderly General. She also loves him. There are assorted adventures. Digby wrestles with a bear, he plays lady's maid to Geraldine, he goes fishing with an Admiral who catches an enormous salmon. And on the deeper wilds he has fearful encounters with a pack of wolves, which assault the camp in which he and Silver Bells and Indians of her tribe are wintering.

It is an occasion of horrid carnage. As far as can be guessed, at least a thousand wolves assaulted the stockade, and all were slain, while the tepees within the defenses were set ablaze and consumed and two Indians slain. There is a good priest, too, who dwells among the redskins for their souls' good, and a horrid orgie just as Digby (who is the soul of honor) is about to marry the lovely forest maiden. The orgie rather turns him from his purpose, and other events intervene. Incidentally, you hear many other fish stories and bear stories, and some wild-wood orations in a sort of jumble of Cooperese and the language used by modern writers of Indian animal stories. Perhaps you think "Ready Rifle" returns in the end to civilisation and marries Geraldine—who is now a widow. That's as may be; at all events, it's something of a tragedy. The story may amuse boys, perhaps, but Cooper is a deal better.

British Imperial Affairs.

There are eight lectures in this first series of "Compatriots' Club Lectures," edited by the Committee of the Compatriots' Club of London, and published by The Macmillan Company.

The Compatriots' Club, a non-partisan body, was constituted in March, 1904, with the object of advancing the ideal of a united British Empire, and of advocating those principles of constructive policy on all constitutional, economic, defensive, and educational questions which will help toward the fulfillment of that ideal. During the first year of its existence the club has displayed considerable activity. Papers on one or other of the imperial topics in which it is interested have been read and discussed at its private meetings, and two successive series of public lectures have been held under its auspices. Moreover, members of the club have addressed meeting in different parts of the country (Great Britain).

The papers in the present volume were read and discussed at the club premises. They are: "The Principles of Constructive Economics as Applied to the Maintenance of Empire," by J. E. Gelvin; "Tariff Reform and National Defense," by E. W. Wilson, author of "Iron-Clads in Action"; "Imperial Preference and the Cost of Food," by Sir Vincent Caillard; "The Evolution of Empire," by the Hon. Sir Edmund G. Fitzpatrick, K. C. M. G., C. B., "The Proper Distribution of the Population of the Empire," by H. A. Gwynne; "Political Economy and the Tariff Problem," by Prof. W. J. Ashley; "Colonial Preference in the Past," by John W. Hills, and "Tariff Reform and Political Morality," by the Rev. Dr. William Cunningham, author of "Growth of English Industry and Commerce."

Rubies and Sapphires.

There are almost as many false clues to the great robbery of Mrs. Van Suyden's jewels as one has fingers and thumbs, and the gullible reader, keen on the scent, barks madly up one tree after another only to find a few pages further on a perfectly sure clue in an absolutely different direction. This being the case, we have no hesitancy in pronouncing this story of "The Van Suyden Sapphires" an exceedingly interesting tale in spite of its thinning out toward the end. There are, after all, few detective stories that do not have weak links in their chains, and so the dragging in of the French maid Estelle in this instance and her foolish murder of the master criminal may be overlooked.

The whole thing began with a young actress, Elida Yeats's desire for notoriety. She had been invited as a guest at the house party of Mrs. Van Suyden at her country home, Onyx Court. That in itself was an excellent advertisement, but Elida meant to have her name more loudly trumpeted than by merely being a guest at a fashionable gathering. Therefore she borrowed from the jeweler Sonnenthal a magnificent necklace of rubies with the intention of having it robbed while at Onyx Court. She herself, for the sake of surety, planned to commit the theft, and as messenger to return the gems to their rightful owner she selected Miss Gwendolen Eustacia Brambleston, also a guest at the house party. Miss Brambleston's part in the affair was merely to hand the necklace to Mr. Sonnenthal, and for this she was to receive a large and substantial reward. Miss Brambleston was poor, and so she fell.

But had it been only the rubies that were stolen out of the safe at Onyx Court all might have been well, but the ancestral Van Suyden sapphires disappeared at the same time, and thereupon the web of evidence begins to knit.

Naturally, Miss Brambleston (who tells the story in the first person) gets mixed up unpleasantly; also for a while the reader wags his head and rolls his eyes wisely in the direction of the gay Elida; then, too, there is another guest, a fiery haired gentleman who somehow seems to be no gentleman, and who, on the whole, is a suspicious character. Besides these there is a young farmer who is very polite to Miss Brambleston, and who helps her out of a dilemma at the very outset, when, in a panic of fear, she tries to throw the rubies intrusted to her care out of a train window, in the belief that she is carrying the sapphires instead; and later we see this same farmer as a sort of automobile Raffles. Baggerly, the red-haired guest, becomes more and more the object of Gwendolen's suspicion and Gwendolen becomes more and more the object of Baggerly's suspicion, and so the merry chase goes on, with Harry Glenn, the automobile Raffles, darting in and out of the story to make confusion worse confounded, and Sonnenthal playing all quietly in the dark until almost the very last chapter. And for the sake of his feminine readers Mr. Carey has sweetened his story, so to speak, with a dash of love, manifested in the steadfast devotion of Captain Duncan McCracken to Gwendolen, which, in the face of the most appalling circumstantial evidence against her, remains unshaken.

"Through Hidden Shensi."

Charles Scribner's Sons have inserted a short biographical preface to the new edition of the late Francis H. Nichols's "Through Hidden Shensi." (8vo, pp. about 350. Cloth, $2 net.) which is appearing with many illustrations taken by and for the author. The writer says of Mr. Nichols:

Mr. Nichols had not only a rare talent and temperament for the work he had set himself, but a breadth of view and humane ideals which were very noticeable. He had a sincere sympathy with the people whose life he studied, and that capacity for successful communication with Eastern races of which its value may be judged by its rarity. Its seems to have shown discretion as unvarying as his persistence, and from his letters and papers which have reached home it is evident that he made friends under the most unexpected and adverse conditions.

The author, as will be recalled, died late in December, last year, from pneumonia. He was at that time at Gyangtse, a little more than a hundred miles from Lhassa, which he had intended to enter when he left New York over a year and a half previously. He remained interned in the Forbidden Land when he was sent by The Christian Herald in charge of its relief for sufferers by famine in the little-visited province of Shensi. This journey resulted in the present volume.

Mark Twain's Sketches.

About the middle of June the Harpers will publish a volume of Mark Twain's, entitled "Sketches New and Old," and including among forty-six items some of Mr. Clemens's early work, which first saw light in San Francisco papers, Dutch Gulch, Jackass Hill, Tuolumne County, the days of '49, and the Comstock. Among the titles are "Jim Wolfe and the Cats of Commerce," "The Story of the Bad Little Boy," "The Killing of Julius Cæsar Localized," "My Favorite Authors," "Mrs. Caudle's Curtain Lectures," &c.

IT is now more than twenty-five years since

was first published and it still remains the standard of comparison for all later detective stories, the most successful of which have been announced as "equal to

The aggregate sales of this engrossing and brilliant book have been far in advance of those of any detective story published before or since.

After wearing out two sets of plates, the publishers have decided to bring out an entirely new edition in full 12mo size, with frontispiece in colors and other striking illustrations by G. W. Peters.

TO STORY WRITERS.

THE WOMAN'S HOME COMPANION wants clever short stories—and lots of them. We are printing half a dozen or so every month. We want more. Quick decision and prompt and generous payment is our editorial trademark. We particularly like stories that are stories—love stories of course—but stories of action, of lively movement, or original plot, of mystery and romance besides. If you have anything really first-class to offer, put it in an envelope with a stamped and self-addressed envelope for return if unavailable, and send it to the editor of the Woman's Home Companion, 35 W. 21st Street, New York City.

A New French Dictionary.

The scheme of a new series of uniform bilingual dictionaries is explained by Robert Morris Pierce in a preface to the first volume of the series. This is called "International French-English and English-French Dictionary" (New York: Hinds, Noble & Eldredge,) and is the work of Paul Passy, Professor of Phonetics in the University of Paris, and George Hempl, Professor of English Philology and General Linguistics in the University of Michigan. The most conspicuous feature of the work, which will doubtless be maintained throughout the series, is the system of an international alphabet—made by inverted letters—by which the pronunciation of each word is designated. This alphabet is the result of long and careful experiments in phonetics, and when once the student has acquired the vocal values of each letter, said student will undoubtedly be able to pronounce in the most approved fashion every word contained in the bilingual series.

Concerning the dictionary before us it may be stated that the typography is especially inviting, and the punctuation is reduced to bare necessities. The vocabularies are made up of words of the most common usage; the American spelling is preserved throughout the English vocabulary and American pronunciation, where it is found to conflict with that acceptable in Great Britain. The definitions are, in general, confined to equivalents of the title word except where it is absolutely necessary to define that word by a phrase, as in the case of idioms.

This dictionary is, in fact, a carefully compiled vocabulary of English and French words and their synonyms. It is, as the compiler points out in his preface, primarily for the use of English speaking people. "I have," he adds, "purposely avoided the attempt, so commonly made, to make a book equally well fitted to either of two or more nationalities, and trust that I have thus avoided the common result: a book imperfectly fitted to any nationality."

A Man of Wool.

This little comedy of Mr. John Kendrick Bangs's ("The Worsted Man." Illustrated. 24mo. New York: Harper & Brothers. 50 cents) is based on the Frankenstein theory. A man made of cotton and wool comes to life to flirt madly with eight guileless summer girls. The scene is laid in a country hotel guiltless of male guests. The girls sing wailing songs to the music of "Pinafore," "Patience," &c., but one, more energetic and original than the rest, creates this soft, cotton-brained creature, gives him to drink of the waters of the famous springs upon which the hotel bases its advertisements, and there breathes before the delighted girls Mr. Woolley himself. One thing Mr. Woolley lacks which makes him quite safe—he has no heart to either give or lose. But there did Miss Patience, his creator, reckon without the beliboy. That prudent youth had gathered all the lost hearts of the season before, and at a sacrifice disposes of them to the cunning Woolley. Some, it is true, were scorched, some quite cold, others battered, and one was broken, but they did well enough. Mr. Woolley with a heart apiece for each girl does no damage, but he meets his just deserts when the girls, each taking him by a thread, unravel him for his wickedness. The little comedy is undoubtedly intended by Mr. Bangs for acting in amateur theatricals.

Pacific Islanders, 1768-1780.

"Cook's Voyages of Discovery," with eight illustrations in color, by John Williamson, will soon be added to the series containing "Robinson Crusoe," A. R. Hope's "Stories," Rume Nisbet's "The Divers," and Mungo Park's "Travels in the Interior of Africa," all with colored pictures. The Macmillan Company is the American publisher.

The present book is edited by John Barrow, F. R. S., F. S. A. It contains the accounts by Capt. James Cook (1728-1770) of three voyages made to Pacific islands by order of the British Admiralty. There are also the account of how Capt. Cook met his death from the journal of Capt. King, and some "remarks" by Capt. Clerke, who succeeded Cook, on the death of the latter and the events that led up to it.

Cook discovered in his first voyage to the South Seas the Society Islands and Cook Straits. During the second voyage he discovered New Caledonia, the Island of Georgia, and Sandwich Land; the third voyage was the most important. Besides several smaller islands in the Southern Pacific, he discovered the Sandwich Islands, explored what had until then remained unknown of the western coast of America, (from 43 degrees, 30 minutes north,) ascertained the proximity of the Continents of Asia and America, passed the Straits between them, and explored the coast of Asia.

QUERIES.

TO secure attention to this department every communication must be signed with the full name and address of the inquirer, which will not be published unless the inquirer so desires. Trivial questions will not be heeded. Queries will be answered in the order of their receipt, and as the number received weekly is very large and the pressure upon our columns is always very great, inquirers must always be prepared to await their turn.

A. J. TURNER, Portage, Wis. : (1) What book, if any, has been published on the "Prison Ships" of the Revolution? (2) Have the rolls of the troops who went to Canada on the Quebec Expedition, 1775, ever been published, and where are the rolls kept?

(1) There are various accounts of personal experiences on the British prison ships, published forty years ago or more, such as those by Thomas Dring, Thomas Andros, Christopher Hawkins; and references to the ships and their victims in all histories of New York City and Brooklyn. The historical societies of the Eastern States have books on the subject; but there seems to be no recent work on it. (2) All the States which sent men on the expedition against Quebec have the rolls more or less complete, and some of them have been published: "Revolutionary Rolls in the Massachusetts Archives," "New Hampshire Revolutionary Rolls," James A. Robertt's "New York in the Revolution."

F. McALLISTER, Lakewood, N. J.: Can you tell me the author of this quotation:

"Thou hairy-headed monster thing
O who would wish to be thy King!"

Sir Walter Scott; see "The Lady of the Lake," Canto V., Stanza 30.

S. J. MACDONALD, Newark, N. J.: Can you inform me if any scientific or other writer has ever published a reply to Romanes's "Origin of the Human Faculty, or Mental Evolution of Man"?

We find no reply to this work of Romanes. It was reviewed when it appeared, in 1888, and commented upon; but seemingly not replied to.

F. S. HERSEN, 110 East One Hundred and Twelfth Street, New York City: Can you aid me in understanding why the three stories which we have always been given as from "The Arabian Nights" are not in Lady Burton's "Thousand and One Nights" at all? I mean the stories of "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves," and "Sinbad the Sailor." I asked a friend about this, and he said that I would be surprised to learn that none of the stories in Lane's "Arabian Nights" were to be found in Lady Burton's edition. But this I have not verified. Are there two works called "The Arabian Nights"?

"The Arabian Nights," as published ordinarily, are made up of parts of various collections, added to or subtracted from as each editor chooses. "Ali Baba," "The Forty Thieves," and "Sinbad" were not in the manuscript used by Galland when he first introduced European readers to the stories. Burton, in the introduction to his translation of the "Thousand Nights and One Night," comments on the diverse sources followed by Galland and his successors; chiefly Lane. Lady Burton's version of her husband's translation gives a reference to Lane for each of the stories; your friend's assertion, therefore, seems unfounded.

S. B. M., Hackensack, N. J.—Will you kindly name about twelve best short stories by American authors? The reading aloud to occupy about an hour or an hour and a half.

Scribner's "Short Stories by American Authors"—some ten volumes, to be had separately—will meet your needs admirably. Rossiter Johnson's "Little Classics" contain many American stories, and may be had separately. They are published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co.

A YONKERS READER, Yonkers, N. Y.—Can you furnish me with a list of notable novels which have socialism for their theme?

Here is a tentative list: "Alton Locke" and "Yeast," Charles Kingsley; "Hard Times," Charles Dickens; "Philistia," "The Ivory Gate," "Love in a Mist"; "An Agitator," "David Grieve" and "Marcella," by Mrs. Humphry Ward; "No. 5 John Street," by Richard Whiteing; "A Traveler from Altruria," by Howells; "Metzerott, Shoemaker," "Felix Holt, the Radical," by George Eliot; "This Son of Vulcan."

SNEKCID, New York City.—Speaking of Dickens, Andrew Lang ejaculates: "How poor the world of fancy would be, how dispeopled of her dreams, if in some ruin of the social system the books of Dickens were lost, and if The Dodger and Charley Bates and Mr. Crinkle and Miss Squeers and Sam Weller and Mrs. Gamp and Dick Swiveller were to perish or to vanish with Menander's men and women!" This is quoted by W. E. Henley, who goes on to speak of "such masterpieces as Jonas Chuzzlewit and Doubledick and Eugene Wrayburn and the immortal Mrs. Gamp," &c. Who are Mr. Crinkle and Doubledick! A cursory turning over of Dickens's novels has failed to reveal either character.

There is a Mr. Crinkles in the "Mudfog Papers," who appears as the inventor and exhibitor of a beautiful pocket-picking machine; Richard Doubledick is in the story of the "Seven Poor Travelers." He is a wild youth, who enlists, is present at Badajoz, and at Waterloo, where he is wounded. He becomes a Captain, marries, and later meets the French officer who killed his Captain. He has vowed to challenge him; but time has made him more forgiving of other's sins, and he pardons him.

C. G. PARIGOT, 503 Fifth Avenue, New York City.—Replying to W. D. Noyes's inquiry, would say that the word "Irunac" is, or rather the words "Irunac Bat" are, in the Basque language. Their meaning is as follows: "Irunac," the three; "Bat," one, meaning "three in one." This refers to the three Basque Provinces of Viscaya, Guipuscoa, and Alava, which have as a common bond the Basque language and a strong Carlist feeling. There was a paper published in Bilbao some thirty years ago, and probably still published, called Irunac Bat; but I doubt whether the Spanish Government ever had a war vessel called by that name, as it does not favor the Basque and Carlist feelings of those provinces. This is no doubt, however, that there are such corporal vessels by that name.

M. L. S. MILLS, Portland, Me.—R. G. Bell, Brooklyn, N. Y., desires to know the name of the author of a verse beginning:

"I, man may cry 'Church, Church,' at every word," &c.

It is from that immensely witty production "An Ode to Ray Wilson Bass," by Thomas Hood.

MISS FLORA TACHAU, Yonkers, N. Y.: Could you inform me if there is any book that has been compiled containing trite after-dinner speeches? If so, who is the publisher?

"Modern Eloquence," edited by the late Thomas B. Reed and others, and published by J. D. Morris & Co., Philadelphia, contains three volumes of after-dinner speeches. Two volumes of Mr. C. M. Depew's speeches have been published by the Cassell Company, too.

ETTA I. CRANES, Goshen, N. Y.—Mrs. E. A. Babcock, Ithaca, N. Y., asks for a poem beginning:

"Come, gather closer to my side,
My little smitten flock,
And I will tell of him who brought Pure water from the rock."

Title, "A Father to His Motherless Children." Mrs. L. H. Sigourney is the author, and it is one of a collection of her poems printed in Philadelphia by Key & Biddle, 1833.

ROGO, New York City: An inquiry by one of your correspondents some two weeks ago related to the following: "Piddleford and Its People," by H. H. Riley; with four woodcuts after Herrick, (front, page 49,) and at pages 22, 140, and 162; bronze cloth, plctl. gilt back; 12mo; New York, Samuel Hueston, 246 Broadway; 1854. This is the original edition. Collation: One blank leaf, pp. xii., pp. 270, (the last page blank,) four leaves of advertisements. The woodcuts are inserted—that is, on separate leaves. A subsequent edition of this book, without the woodcuts, was described in your columns in answer to the original inquiry. The work was evidently suggested by "Little Pedlington" and "The Pedlingtonians," by John Poole, author of "Paul Fry," London, 1839; post 8vo.

E. B. H., 169 Broadway, New York City: I would be pleased to receive a copy of poem, "Some Time." I am able to give but one verse, viz.:

"Some time, when all life's lessons have been learned,
And stars and suns forevermore have set,
The things which our weak judgments here have spurned,
The things o'er which we've cried with lashes wet,
Will flash before us out of life's dark night,
As stars shine brightest in the deep tints of blue;
And we shall see how all God's plans were right,
And what we thought reproof was love most true."

You will find the complete poem in "The World's Best Poetry," IV., 344. It is by M. R. Smith.

D. S. V., Brooklyn, N. Y.—In reply to appeal of John Hoyt, South Norwalk, Conn., the title is "Shipwrecked." The author is Francois Coppee. It may be found in Volume VI., No. 23, of The Quarterly Elocutionist.

H. B. S., New London, N. H.: 1. Will you please tell me who Annie Trumbull Slosson is, where she lives, and give a short account of her life? 2. What is the best book published to decide questions in connection with correct speaking and writing? 3. What book or books give the most efficient help to women desiring a knowledge in general of business?

1. Mrs. Annie Trumbull Slosson is a writer of short stories; she is a naturalist as well, an authority on insects and botany. She was born in Stonington about fifty years ago, and may be addressed at Harper & Brothers, New York City. 2. A good book is Hill's Rhetoric, or Quackenbos's Rhetoric. 3. Try Cromwell's "American Business Woman."

S. A. FARRAND, Newark, N. J.—In my boyhood I read one of the odes for which Annie Powers, Washington, Va., inquires. I give below a verse as I remember it. I have a vague impression that the title was Hood's "Ode on the Birth of His Baby," but I do not find it in his works, and would be glad to know of the author:

"One more new claimant for human fraternity,
Swelling the flood that sweeps on to eternity.
I who have filled the cup tremble to think of it,
Poor, be it what it may,—still I must drink of it."

R. R. D., 150 Fifth Avenue, New York City.—Possibly M. B. Levick would like to be directed to the original use of the phrase "the peculiar treasure of Kings," borrowed by Rudyard Kipling and the late Frank Norris. It occurs in Ecclesiastes, ii., 8, authorized version; the revision (quite unnecessarily) omits the word "peculiar." The passage has appealed to the imagination of many writers: "I gathered me also silver and gold, and the peculiar treasure of Kings and of the provinces; I got me men singers and women singers, and the delights of the sons of men." Most commentators see in the phrase a description of the special possesions of sovereign rulers, like Solomon, as distinct from the wealth of private citizens. Dr. Plumptre understands it to point to the special gifts which came to Solomon as tribute from "Seba and Sheba," (Psalms, lxxii., 10,) and from the "Kings of Arabia and the Governors of the country." (First Kings, ix., 15; x., 27.) Your understanding of Kipling's use of it is unquestionably correct.

G. M. MATHER, Brooklyn, N. Y.—"A continual dropping weareth away the stone." I have been searching for the above sentence, with the aid of Cruden's Concordance, believing it to be a Bible text, and fail to find it. Can some one enlighten me as to its origin?

The origin of this is Lucretius, "De Rerum Natura," Book I., line 313. Plutarch uses the idea; and so does Lyly.

S. D. S., New York City.—(1) Dryden in his "Alexander's Feast" says:

"The master saw the madness rise,
His glowing cheeks, his ardent eyes," &c.

To whom does "master" refer to in the above line? (2) Did Byron and Moore, the poets, ever fight a duel? If so, kindly state the cause of same and its result; (3) also kindly inform me as to Tintern Abbey, and how Wordsworth came to write a poem in memory of his revisting that abbey.

(1) To Timotheus, who was playing on the lyre, and singing to Alexander. (2) No. (3) Tintern Abbey is a ruin in Monmouthshire, England. The abbey was founded in 1131, and closed by Henry VIII. when he suppressed the monasteries. It is in a beautiful situation, and much frequented by tourists and lovers of scenery, to which it owes its fame. Wordsworth's poem does not refer to its beauties, but to the memories which they awakened in him. Wordsworth had already lingered upon the quiet scene in his earlier poem, "Lines Written on Tintern Abbey, Revisited in 1798." Of these two poems, the former, though famous, is not now read. The latter, "Lines Written a few Miles above Tintern Abbey, On Revisiting the Banks of the Wye During a Tour, July 13, 1798," is one of the most beautiful of Wordsworth's poems, and is read by all lovers of poetry.

J. F. S., Brooklyn, N. Y.—I can not put my hands on the exact reference, but I think it was in connection with the Amesbury Bible Society's imprint which may be conveyed a suggestion of its inferiority as well as in fact. But I find on consideration that the matter of chapter headings is one which could be handled in the very spirit of brevity and fullness.

Nothing seems to be known about the authorship of the chapter headings of the authorized version. According to Dr. Plumptre, who wrote more than forty years ago, there was a growing dislike among scholars for the chapter headings. In the Catholic version the headings were intended to give an authoritative commentary to the lay reader of the Bible, but the Translators of 1604-11 abandoned the idea of making the headings more than a table of contents to the chapters. But since then new headings have been made until they "enter upon the work of interpretation, giving, as in Canticles, Psalms, and Prophets, passive, mystical meanings." The Revisers of 1870-84 therefore discarded the chapter headings, which among scholars have never been approved highly, and have had not even the conventional or traditional force of the chapter and verse divisions.

MARION J. MANLEY, Junction City, Kan.—The verse quoted by Annie Powers is probably adapted from a very old minor hymn entitled "The Old Israelites," the first verse of which is:

"The old Israelites knew what it was they must do,
If fair Canaan they would possess;
They must still keep in sight of the pillar of light
Which led on to the promised rest.
The camps on the road could not be their abode,
But as oft as the trumpet should blow
They all glad of a chance of a further advance
Must then take up their baggage and go."

It is a long poem, and if the rest is desired by Annie Powers, drop a card and I will gladly send it.

E. G. G., Orange, N. J.: Can any of your readers tell me if it was Mme. de Stael who said: "The more I know of men the better I like dogs"? And where I can find it? If not Mme. de Stael, who was the author?

This saying is ascribed to Mme. de Stael.

ERNEST INGERSOLL, 50 Morningside Avenue, New York City.—As to aquaria, you are not up to date. Several more or less commendable American books are to be had. One of the best and most easily accessible is Eugene Smith's "The Home Aquarium," published by Dutton, I think, about 1902, at $1.25.

Appeals to Readers.

EDWARD J. ABBOTT, Stony Point, N. Y.: I desire information concerning a book entitled "The Ancient Sage." Further than the title I have no information. I will be deeply grateful for information with regard to author, publisher, and nature of book.

HUBERT M. SKINNER, 521 Wabash Avenue, Chicago: About a quarter century ago many newspapers republished an old poem which they ascribed to Keats, but which I have never been able to find in any collection of Keats's poems. Can you tell me where I can find the composition? The poem is a very singular one, which runs somewhat like this:

"Swing on, old pendulum of the world,
Swing on, swing on forever,
Keeping the time of suns and stars
In the march that endeth never!
Keeping the time, the unceasing time,
Of human will and endeavor—
Swing on, old pendulum of the world,
Swing on, swing on forever!

C. B. GARVAN, Townsend Building, New York City.—Will you tell me where I can find a poem entitled "There Is No Unbelief"? I was under the impression that it was written by Owen Meredith, but do not find it among his poems. Each stanza ended or began with the statement that there is no unbelief, and proceeded to demonstrate metrically that we would not go to sleep at night or plant the various seeds were it not for an underlying belief that the eternal energy has all things in its keeping.

M. B. S., 45 Cedar Street, New York, thanks Mrs. A. F. Conant for the information regarding the authorship of the verse beginning "I gaze aloof on the fretted roof," and would be very much obliged if Mrs. Conant would quote the entire poem.

AMANDA T. JONES, Junction City, Kan.—Can any one supply me with a copy of one of my own little poems which seems lost to me beyond recovery? It appeared in Good Form, a short-lived Chicago magazine, somewhere about 1890, (earlier or later,) and was entitled, "Spere-hair and Spindle-hair."

J. E. H., Westport, Essex County, N. Y.—Can any reader inform we where can be found a portrait of Gen. Leonard Covington, who died at French Mills, (Fort Covington,) N. Y., of wounds received at the battle of Chrystler's Farm, war of 1812? Gen. Covington was born at Aquasco, Prince George County, Md., 1762, was a member of the Maryland Legislature, and member of Congress from Maryland.

G. N. L., Plattsburg, N. Y.—Can you give me the author of the little poem entitled "In Nicotina," the first lines of which are:

"Oh, she was a gay little cigarette,
And he was a fat cigar,
And, side by side, on the tabourette,
They stood in a ginger jar."

I cut them out of a newspaper years ago; they were uncredited. Possibly it is a newspaper poem, though a charming tobacco song, nevertheless.

F. McALLISTER, Lakewood, N. J.—Where is this quotation to be found:

"* * * * sitting by the springs of life,
Waiting for the morrow that shall free us from the strife"?

I should think Tennyson or Wordsworth.

K. P. Y., Brooklyn, N. Y.—Will you kindly print Kipling's verses to "Bob" Evans, beginning:

"Zoetrope does things with a pencil,
And I do things with a pen"?

An Admirable Detective Story

All the requirements for a first class detective tale are more than met by Mr. Fred M. White's "The Crimson Blind" (R. F. Fenno & Co.) It is by no means a short story, but the reader will read it breathlessly to the end. He is plunged at once into a mystery, as he should be in every well constructed tale of the sort, and is led rapidly out of one complication into another, enough being explained to satisfy his mind for the moment, but more remaining unaccounted for till he has read further.

There is little of preternatural wisdom in the tale; what knowledge is obtained comes naturally enough. The villain has no redeeming trait and is bad enough to satisfy the most exacting. The play between his moves and those of his detectives is kept in suspense skilfully.

THE PUBLISHERS.

Plans of Some of Them—Forthcoming New Books.

THE Booklovers Magazine, which has been acquired by D. Appleton & Co., will appear under the new auspices with the July number. An attempt will be made to issue it as a first-class illustrated monthly, but at a price considerably below the price of first-class magazines. A feature of the forthcoming number will be the beginning of a novel by Robert W. Chambers, whose "Iole" is published this week. The new story will be called "The Reckoning." It is a romance of the American Revolution, and recalls Cooper's "Spy." Another feature of the new magazine will be a posthumous work by Dr. Thomas W. Evans, the American dentist who aided the escape of the Empress Eugénie. The work is being edited by Dr. E. A. Crane.

G. P. Putnam's Sons will publish in June "Two Moods of a Man," by Horace G. Hutchinson. It is said to be a character study, representing the struggle between individual aim and ambition and the duty toward society.

G. P. Putnam's Sons have in active preparation a volume from the pen of Oscar Terry Crosby, dealing with the religion and character of the people of "Tibet and Turkestan." The aim of the book is an independent and frank discussion of the results of the recent British expedition to Tibet.

Besides the original narrative of "The Journey of Alvar Nunes Cabeza de Vacs, from Florida to the Pacific, 1528-1536," which has been translated for A. S. Barnes & Co.'s Trail Makers Series by Mrs. Fanny Bandelier, wife of the well-known archæologist and authority on early Spanish explorations in America, A. F. Bandelier, there will also be the report of Father Marcos of Nizza, the first explorer of New Mexico, whose journey came between those of Cabeza de Vaca and Coronado. The book has been edited by Mr. Bandelier, who has written an introduction.

The J. B. Lippincott Company is issuing a new edition of Cooke's "Handbook of Obstetrical Nursing." The earlier edition has been thoroughly revised and new material added to it.

The Macmillan Company will bring out W. Holman Hunt's art book, "The Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood," in an edition uniform with the recent biography of a celebrated member of the brotherhood, "The Memorials of Edward Burne-Jones." The volume will be illustrated with photogravures.

Dodd, Mead & Co. will publish in September a book on "The Cathedrals of England." It will contain sixty full-page illustrations in colors of the great cathedrals.

Owing to the large advance demand for Jack London's new story, "The Game," the Macmillan Company has again postponed its publication until June 7. During this week also "The Religion of Duty," the addresses of Prof. Felix Adler, edited and arranged by Leslie W. Sprague, will be sent out by McClure, Phillips & Co. after a long delay.

The new novel by S. R. Crockett, "May Margaret," which is said to be the author's best work so far, will be published next week by Dodd, Mead & Co.

The new edition of the J. B. Lippincott Company's "Pronouncing Gazetteer of the World," which is being edited by Prof. Heilprin, is being turned, it is announced, into more than a Post Office directory—it will be a volume for the business man, a reference for the office, and will be of use in any library.

McClure, Phillips & Co. are publishing Volume III. in their Country Home Library, "The Flower Garden," by Ida D. Bennett. Other volumes in the series are on "The Country Home" and "The Orchard and Fruit Garden."

The Macmillan Company will bring out in June a new edition of Hamlin Garland's novel, "Rose of Dutcher's Coolly."

Among the calendars to appear next Fall from Dodd, Mead & Co. will be "The Beverly Calendar," with pictures in color by Harrison Fisher, and a Hamilton Wright Mabie calendar, which will have quotations from the author's "Essays on Nature" and reproductions of natural scenery, colored by hand.

Doubleday, Page & Co. will publish in the early Autumn a manual of house building in the country, entitled "The Country House," by E. C. Hetzinger. The book treats of all subjects connected with the building of a house—the selection of a site, plans of a house, outside finishing, heating, lighting, halls, stairways, living rooms, water supply, gardens, contract and specifications, &c. There are to be over 300 illustrations from photographs and plans.

Secretary John Hay's little poem which he wrote for the World's Christian Endeavor Convention held at Washington a few years ago has been set to the tune of "Humility" and included in the new "Hymns of Worship and Service," which the Century Company is issuing.

E. P. Dutton & Co. will soon publish "A Pietist of the Napoleonic Wars," which is the Countess Reden's biography. The volume includes reminiscences of the American Revolution from the English point of view. The later years of the Countess's life saw the events of the Napoleonic era.

G. P. Putnam's Sons have down for June issue "Under Guiding Stars," a story of New England life, by Miss Agnes Blake Poor, author of "Boston Neighbors."

Doubleday, Page & Co. have received the manuscript of the first volumes of a "Home Library of Law," by Albert S. Boles. There will be six volumes in the set. They will deal with the ownership and use of land, (two volumes,) the ownership and use of personal property, (two volumes,) the pledging of personal property and corporations, and domestic relations and wrongs, each one volume.

G. P. Putnam's Sons have acquired the book rights of "Lady Bobs, Her Brother, and I," by Miss Jean Chamblin, which The Critic is first to publish serially.

The Macmillan Company is bringing out a seventh impression of Prof. Wilbur L. Cross's "Development of the English Novel," which first appeared in 1900. In the new preface the author points out that some "amusing" errors have been corrected. He adds: "In rereading the prophecy at the end of the book for the immediate future of the novel I am surprised that it has come so near the truth. The estimate of Kipling has proved, doubtless, too enthusiastic; but the dominant note in recent fiction, as was anticipated, 'a love of adventure and an exaltation of the strong man.'"

A new edition of Matthew Arnold's "Sohrab and Rustum and Other Poems" is appearing in the Macmillan Company's Pocket American and English Classics. It is edited by Justus C. Castleman, head of the department of English in the Bloomington High School, Indiana. He has written an introduction, provided notes, and in a short biography speaks of Arnold as a man, poet, lyricist, dramatist, and critic. There are also a chronological list of Arnold's works and a list of contemporary English and American prose and verse writers.

The Macmillan Company is bringing out a new edition, in the Pocket Classics Series, of Joseph Henry Shorthouse's "John Inglesant: A Romance." The book is appearing in two styles, limp leather and cloth, each with a frontispiece in line drawing.

The Funk & Wagnalls Company is sending out "Modern Masters of Pulpit Discourse," by Prof. William C. Wilkinson of the University of Chicago. The volume presents appreciations and criticisms of some of the greatest preachers in America and England, with descriptions of their pulpit methods and personal qualities. It has been written for the general reader as well as the preacher and theologian.

"Memoirs of an American Citizen" is the title of a new novel by Robert Herrick, author of "The Real World," "The Web of Life," &c., which the Macmillan Company will publish toward the end of next month. The volume will contain fifty illustrations.

"Free Thinking and Plain Speaking," with an introduction by James Bryce and Herbert Paul, is the latest volume in the uniform edition of "The Essays of Sir Leslie Stephen," which G. P. Putnam's Sons are bringing out.

History of Plague.

The Macmillan Company is bringing out "A Treatise on Plague, Dealing with the Historical, Epidemiological, Clinical, Therapeutic, and Preventive Aspects of the Disease," by Prof. W. J. Simpson of King's College, London. The scope of the volume is indicated in the title. Prof. Simpson gives statistics, tables, &c., also many diagrams and maps, and several illustrations. He writes as follows in his first chapter on the antiquity of plague:

"However uncertain may be the nature of the maladies of pestilences of a bygone age, it is certain that plague is a disease of great antiquity, for occasionally in some of the oldest records the description is sufficiently explicit to remove all doubt as to the disease being plague. The Levant and the countries adjoining have been the centres of plague for at least 3,000 years, the first notice of the disease being in Syria. Plague is mentioned in the Bible as occurring centuries before the Christian era, in the land of the Philistines being sent as a punishment to Pharaoh for the military operations against the Israelites. . . . Where are ancient references to plague more full and explicit than those of the Greek historians, Thucydides and Herodotus? . . . The Greeks believed that

"Some of the stories are humorous, some tragic; but all show power and present life vividly."—New York Sun.
"Senor Guardia is considered one of the literary men of Costa Rica, if not of Central America. The usual merit of the short stories in this collection makes the reader desirous of knowing more of his work. Mr. Casement, who is responsible for the translation, has performed a difficult task in a very satisfactory manner."—New Orleans Picayune.
"Mr. Casement has been able to retain in his translations the effect of the language in which the stories were written. He has kept the idiomatic terms of expression as nearly as possible and the touches of local color make one of their most pleasing qualities."—Cleveland Leader.
"Here is a unique book indeed. . . . Tales like these are not to be found elsewhere."—The Emporia (Kansas) Bulletin.
"The stories are not only good—they are very good. In fact, they will remind the reader of the brilliant sketches of Selma Lagerlof, the Swedish impressionist. One feels after reading the book through that he has been making a voyage of discovery, that he has never known Costa Rica before—more than a geographical name and a possible space on the map of that neck of woods known as Central America—but that now he knows it quite well. . . . The short novels that Mr. Casement has translated for us are cut as clean as a cameo. There is not an amateurish line in them."—Cleveland Town Topics.
"Mr. Casement's account of the little republic is more thorough and satisfactory than any we have met with."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.
". . . 'In 'El Clavel' (The Pink) is told the story of a young country girl who vainly loves a well-to-do gentleman of the city; although here and there reminiscent of Castilian story tellers, the tales and the style in which they are related make one wish to know more of Senor Guardia and his works."—New York Times.

ABOUT AUTHORS.

What Some of Them Are Saying, Writing, or Planning.

MARION CRAWFORD, who spent last Winter in his villa at Sorrento instead of in New York, has just finished a new novel which he calls "Soprano: A Portrait." The heroine is the daughter of an English scholar and an American mother. The story opens in Paris, where the girl is cultivating her voice in order to support herself by singing. "Soprano" will be known by the title "Margaret" in Munsey's Magazine, where it begins as a serial in the June number.

Miss Beatrice Jones, daughter of Mrs. Cadwalader Jones, is to have an illustrated article in the July Scribner entitled "Le Nôtre and His Gardens." Le Nôtre, it will be recalled, was the famous landscape gardener of Louis XIV. His memory has come down to us identified with St. Germain, Versailles, Chantilly, and the Tuileries.

James Huneker, author of the much-discussed "Iconoclasts," is about to start for Weimar, between which and the Villa d'Este near Rome he will during a Summer sojourn follow the course of Liszt's travels and complete his biography of the composer, "Franz Liszt: His Art and His Time," which was begun three years ago. Mr. Huneker's literary and musical training should serve to make him an admirable biographer of a famous musician.

Arthur Henry has written to explain that the character of Karl Fischer, the counterfeiter, in his new novel, "The Unwritten Law," which A. S. Barnes & Co. are publishing, is not an imaginary one, as has been thought by some critics. The facts concerning Fischer's work in coining were taken by Mr. Henry from the records of Chief of Secret Service Wilkie of Washington of the case of Emil Ninger, the New Jersey counterfeiter, and original "Jim the Penman."

S. Crowther, Jr., and Arthur Ruhl have written the next volume in the American Sportsman's Library, which The Macmillan Company is about to publish. It is on "Rowing and Track Athletics." Mr. Crowther deals with the growth of light boat racing in this country from the first race down the Hudson in 1811 until 1904, also discussing the styles in rowing, training, equipment, and coaching. Mr. Ruhl writes about the development of track sport and the various "events," the work of men who have made "records," and traces the formation of the collegiate associations. The volume will be fully illustrated.

A. E. Gallatin writes in the new issue of The Literary Collector on the etchings in color of Bernard Bontet de Monvel, Aubrey Beardsley's letters, and the English caricaturists. A new volume of essays on art by Mr. Gallatin, entitled "Foot Notes," is to be published next month.

George Cary Eggleston says in his "little history" of American life, "Our First Century," which A. S. Barnes & Co. are issuing, that he seeks to give a "popular" picture of those times, and presents "the ideas they brought with them across the sea, the mistakes they made in entering upon a new life under strange conditions, the means adopted of adjusting themselves to their new environment, the forces that gave form to their systems of government, the occupations in which they engaged, their religious beliefs, their amusements, the clothes they wore, and the food they ate."

Miss Alice Rose Power of the Edson School, San Francisco, Cal., has compiled "A Graded Speller," which the J. B. Lippincott Company is publishing.

Hugh T. Sheringham, angling editor of The Field, of London, has gathered his sketches of fishing adventures into a volume, which he has named "An Angler's Hours." Besides the anecdotes of fishing expeditions are pieces of advice and philosophy. The Macmillan Company will publish the book.

Some interesting material concerning Paul Jones will appear in the July number of Scribner's Magazine. It was originally prepared by the late Augustus C. Buell for incorporation in "Paul Jones, Founder of the American Navy." It is an account of Paul Jones, written by John Kilby, quarter gunner of the Bon Homme Richard.

Paul E. More, whose second series of "Shelburne Essays" has just been published, is preparing a third series for G. P. Putnam's Sons.

Henry James will publish through Houghton, Mifflin & Co. this Autumn a book of travel sketches, entitled "English Hours." It will contain many pictures by Joseph Pennell. The author is visiting in Cambridge with his brother, Prof. William James.

Among the literary anniversaries to be celebrated this year is that of Alexis Charles Henri Clérel, Comte de Tocqueville, who was born July 29, 1805. Apropos of de Tocqueville, a French text of his "L'Ancien Régime," edited, with introduction and notes, by G. W. Headlam, is published by Henry Frowde at the Clarendon Press, London. Others of his writings bearing this imprint are his "Quinze Jours au Désert" and extracts from the "Voyages en Sicile," edited by J. E. Mansion, which have been added to the Oxford Modern French Series.

Dr. Samuel J. Andrews, author of "The Life of Our Lord Upon the Earth" and "Man and the Incarnation," recently published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, dedicates the latter "to those Christians, few or many, who trust in the Incarnate Son of God as their Saviour, but who are troubled and fearful as they see the anti-Christian movements and tendencies around them—in hope that their faith in Him as the Living One and Lord over all may be strengthened, and they be encouraged to wait patiently till He shall manifest Himself in the power and glory of His Kingdom."

Miss Myra Kelly, the well-known author of stories of child life in New York's east side, is to have some new tales for the Summer numbers of McClure's. In the report of experiences during her recent trip to Cuba, Miss Kelly says she was not happy at the sugar plantation because at "any time of night or day the mill would set up a howl if it was not fed sugar cane," and preferred Havana "with its terrible forts painted yellow and pink."

Anna Robeson Brown, author of "The Wine Press," published by D. Appleton & Co., has declared that she believes in using types of individuals to bring her principal characters into stronger relief. She holds the idea that "to every individual with any individuality the majority of the people by whom the individual is surrounded resolve themselves into types, with a few exceptions, who are the people interesting enough to love or hate or admire, or even despise."

Rowland Thomas, who won the first prize in a recent short-story contest, will begin in the July World's Work a series of articles on "The Railroads and the Square Deal." He is conducting some first-hand investigations, which will tell the "true" story of American railroads, the struggle of one road against the other, the way of rebates and special concessions, &c.

Prof. C. H. Firth, in the first lecture in his book, "A Plea for the Historical Teaching of History," which Henry Frowde publishes at the Clarendon Press, asks, "Is history a science or an art?" and replies: "To me truth seems to lie between these two extremes. History is neither, but it partakes of the nature of both. A twofold task lies before the historian. One half of his business is the discovery of the truth, and the other half its representation."

Dr. William Henry Drummond, well known in this country and England, is said to be also popular among the French Canadians, whom he describes in his poems, a new volume of which, "The Voyageur," is out this week with G. P. Putnam's Sons' imprint. The book is appearing in two editions, one having photogravure illustrations, the other half-tones and colored plates.

The conclusions on the negro problem, recently reached by Poultney Bigelow in his lectures at the Boston University, are about the same as those reached through other lines of argument by Prof. William B. Smith in his book, "The Color Line." Mr. Bigelow first put forward his views in a chapter in "The Children of the Nations," which was reprinted and distributed by Boston University to correct some misunderstanding as to the lecturer's views.

Prof. Otto Pfleiderer of the University of Berlin writes in the introduction to his "Early Christian Conception of Christ," just issued by G. P. Putnam's Sons in the Crown Theological Library, that "it is to the credit of the theology of the nineteenth century that it has distinguished between the Christ of Faith and the man Jesus of history." The author shows in his study that the primitive conception of Christ has significance and value in the history of religion.

MAYOR WEAVER WINS FIGHT ON GAS RING

Philadelphia Company Withdraws Proposition for Lease.

ACTS ON BOSS DURHAM'S ORDER

Weaver Landslide in Councils Averted by This Action—the Reform Movement to Continue.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 27.—Mayor Weaver has won and the gas lease is dead. The United Gas Improvement Company to-day formally withdrew its proposition for a lease. This action was taken not only with Boss Durham's consent, but by his orders.

The letter withdrawing the proposition, which was written by President Dolan of the company and addressed to Presidents Ransley and McCurdy of the two Councils, was sent from Senator Penrose's office after a long last-ditch conference between the defeated boss, Senator Penrose, and the principal subbosses. The man who a week ago was the absolute ruler of Philadelphia and the head of the most invulnerable political machine in the country, had thrown up his hands and confessed defeat.

So sudden was Durham's action that his lieutenants were in utter ignorance of it, and were claiming victory only a few minutes before the flag was hauled down. John Hammond, the organization whip in Common Council, was standing in the City Hall assuring the reporters that the lease was going through Councils at the very moment that David Martin, the emissary bearing the capitulation, was leaving Dolan's office, where Durham had gone after deciding upon the surrender.

Martin is the famous ex-State Senator who won National fame in the Cleveland-Harrison campaign of 1892 by going to New York to supervise the election in that city. When Durham had decided upon the surrender, he sent for Martin and told him to go to Mayor Weaver and inform him of the surrender.

Acted to Stave Off a Waterloo.

The action of the organization was taken by Durham, McNichol, and Seger at 1:30 this afternoon, and it was for the purpose of staving off a Waterloo. In the morning Durham was still confident of success. The only object of the surrender was to save the ring's prestige by preventing a Weaver landslide in Councils.

Just that and nothing less was the mathematical certainty that the ring faced. The desertions of Councilmen from the ring standard started early in the week as a pattering shower, and by to-day it had become a torrent. Durham's surrender was in the very nick of time. If he had held it off a few hours he would have presented the spectacle of a boss with no influence in his own Council.

As it is Durham just saves his nominal chieftainship and that is all. He can still claim to hold the majority of Councils, and he cannot be contradicted because there will be no vote on the lease. The Mayor had actually won the necessary votes before the Dolan letter was given out, but in the language of poker, there will be no show-down.

President Dolan's Letter.

The Dolan letter was as follows:

"On May 18, 1905, Councils passed an ordinance extending by fifty-three years the term of the lease of the gas works to the United Gas Improvement Company, which fixes the price of gas at $1 for five years, 95 cents for ten years, 90 cents for fifteen years, 85 cents for twenty years, and 80 cents thereafter, and provided for the payment to the City of Philadelphia of an advance without interest for the sum of $25,000,000.

"Though this ordinance was not in full accord with the letter of this company of the 28th of April, 1905, addressed to the Chairman of the sub-committee of the Finance Committee, the modification would have been accepted by this company.

"This proposition was a plain business one. In the opinion of this company, it was one the city could and should accept. Among the reasons in support of it were the following:

"According to the reports filed with the City Controller each year and audited by his department, the amounts expended by the United Gas Improvement Company in additions, extensions, improvements, &c., under the lease have averaged $1,498,000 per annum.

"Assume that the average for the future will be $800,000 per annum, the total for the period of the whole term, as extended, would be $80,000,000, plus the amount now due this company of $14,-863,861.48, making a total of $74,863,-861.48."

Mr. Dolan presents other figures to show that, including the company's payment of $25,000,000 and interest thereon, free gas to public buildings and street lamps, &c., the city will net $487,281,227.48 during the ensuing seventy-five years. Continuing, he says:

"While, of course, the city would not be a gainer by any decrease in the cost of production of gas, on the other hand it would be relieved of all risk of advance in the price of materials entering into the manufacture of gas, such as coal, oil, &c., all of which are increasing in cost, and of all other risks incident to the conduct of the gas business, such as competition from electricity, and possible future discoveries in the art of illumination. It would also be relieved of the present necessity of borrowing money for the city improvements now under way and contemplated, and the consequent increase in tax rate to meet the interest and sinking fund requirements.

"This proposition, as with all business propositions in which the public are involved, was, of course, a proper subject for public consideration and discussion. Instead of the proposition being discussed as a business one from the standpoint of facts open to those who cared to investigate and discuss the subject, there has been little but bitter denunciation."

Significance of Durham's Defeat.

AMERICAN JEWS WIN.

Not to be Excluded from Russia—Due to Recent Work by Hay?

ST. PETERSBURG, May 27.—The Council of the Empire has approved the recommendations of the Passport Commission.

These include universal recognition of foreign passports, thus meeting the representations of the United States on the subject of discrimination against American Jews.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 27.—The action of the Council of the Russian Empire in approving the recommendations of the Passport Commission, which include the concession to the United States that under the treaty of 1834 American Jews bearing passports issued by this Government shall have unimpeded entrance and privilege to travel in Russia, is highly gratifying to the State Department and the President.

The Russian Government has only complied with a demand resting on treaty obligations which Assistant Secretary Loomis last March forcibly insisted upon in a note which was most earnest and unqualified in tone. Mr. Loomis told Russia that she could not expect to enjoy the sympathy of the United States or of the civilized world if she denied the obligations of her treaties and made discriminations based on religious differences.

Within a few days there have been intimations at the State Department that the question had finally been settled favorably to the contention made by this Government. It is believed, however, that the answer by the Council would not have come so early but for the journey of Mr. Hay to Europe, where, it is suspected, he has had important conferences with diplomatic representatives of Russia.

FOUR YEARS FOR MAYOR.

Governor Signs Bill—Aldermen's Powers Curbed.

ALBANY, May 27.—Gov. Higgins to-day signed the bill of Assemblyman Agnew, restoring the four-year term for the Mayor, Controller, and Borough Presidents of New York City, beginning with the election this Fall.

The Governor signed also Senator Elsberg's three bills, transferring from the New York Board of Aldermen to the Board of Estimate and Apportionment the control over public streets and lands in the matter of granting franchises and the power of approval upon rapid transit plans. The bill amending the Rapid Transit act to this effect concludes with the following provision:

"The Board of Estimate and Apportionment of the City of New York shall, with respect to that city, be hereafter for all purposes of this act and be deemed to be the local authority in control of the streets, roads, bridges, viaducts, highways, avenues, boulevards, driveways, parks, parkways, docks, bulkheads, wharves, piers, and public grounds, and waters which are within or belong to the said city; and the consent of such Board of Estimate and Apportionment and the Mayor, without the consent of the Common Council, Board of Aldermen, or other board or officer of the city shall be the only consent of local authorities required hereunder."

One of the bills requires the Board of Estimate, before approving any such franchise, to give a properly advertised public hearing and to publish in two daily newspapers the ascertained money value of the franchise and the compensation proposed.

BATTLE IN DARK WITH NEGRO.

James Page, a negro driver, died in Lebanon Hospital yesterday of an abscess in the brain, which is believed to have been caused by a wound on the head. He was taken to the hospital on Friday from Boston Road and Union Avenue, where he was employed and where he had been taken ill. On his head was an unhealed wound, which it was said he received about ten days ago, at One Hundred and Sixteenth Street and Third Avenue, from some unknown person.

Page was then taken to the Harlem Hospital. He was discharged later as cured, but the wound opened again when he resumed work.

Capt. Brennan made an arrest in the case last night after an exciting fight in the dark in the cellar of an unoccupied house in Bedford Park. His prisoner, James Ebner, colored, of 78 East One Hundred and Fifteenth Street, was finally handcuffed and lodged in the East One Hundred and Fourth Street station. Ebner has been suspected of the assault on Page ever since it occurred.

When news of the driver's death was received Capt. Brennan, garbing himself in old clothes, started off early last night to find Ebner. He soon got on the track of his man, and the trail led to Bedford Park. In an unoccupied house he found evidence that the cellar was being used as a lodging place.

The captain awaited for the occupant.

Soon Ebner appeared, candle in hand, lighting his way down the steps. Capt. Brennan waited until the man was seated. Then, drawing his pistol, he stepped in through the cellar door and said: "I want you, Ebner. You'd better come quietly."

With a quick sweep of his hand the negro threw the candle on the floor and extinguished it. Then in the dark cellar began a fight which lasted for ten minutes. The Captain was armed with billy and pistol; the negro with a heavy club. The two paced about the cellar seeking each other. Finally the Captain got in a lucky blow, which put his man out of action. The candle was relighted, handcuffs were snapped on, and the return trip to the Captain's home station began.

At the station Ebner made a statement to Coroner O'Gorman, in which he admitted striking Page with a club. He said, though, that he had struck in self-defense, Page having drawn a knife on him. He implicated James Beveridge, colored, who lives at the One Hundred and Fifteenth Street address. Detective Thompson was sent immediately and soon returned with Beveridge. Both he and Ebner were locked up. They will be arraigned in the Harlem Court this morning.

LINER FOR THREE DAYS TALKS TO BOTH SHORES

Campania's Daily Has News from Cape Cod and Poldhu.

SIGNALS STRONG AND CLEAR

Operators Confident That Communication Can Be Maintained Whole Distance Across the Atlantic.

For three days the Cunarder Campania, whose voyage from Liverpool ended at 12:19 o'clock yesterday morning, was in communication by wireless telegraph with both sides of the Atlantic at the same time. Mr. Graham, the purser, was able to issue each day of the passage a complete daily paper containing the gist of the most important events that had occurred on both sides of the ocean the previous day while in midocean, when the news was coming from both coasts. Some of the messages from Poldhu, England, were received when the liner was nearly 2,100 miles west of that point, while the American messages came from the Marconi station on Cape Cod when the Campania was 1,800 miles east of Sandy Hook.

The news of the death of William Ziegler, the equipper of arctic expeditions, was received from Poldhu on Thursday morning, when the Campania was distant from the wireless station there 2,080 miles. The news had been received in England by cable. Two hours later the news came from the station at Cape Cod, which was then 1,085 miles distant.

The daily talks of the big Cunarder with the shore began at 1 o'clock last Sunday afternoon, when the Campania was 300 miles from Liverpool, and The Cunard Bulletin when it appeared at 6 A. M. the next morning contained a long dispatch from London announcing that the Japanese under Marshal Oyama had repulsed three Russian columns. A second message, dated St. Petersburg, was that the draft of a scheme for a Russian National Assembly had been completed.

Tuesday morning The Cunard Bulletin contained the following paragraph:

"The Campania was in direct communication with England and America during the night. Wireless messages were received from the Marconi stations at Poldhu, England, and at Cape Cod, near Boston, U. S. A. The messages from England were sent out by Reuter's Agency, and those from America by The Associated Press. The signals were strong and clear."

HAD PICKED UP CAPE COD.

It was 3 o'clock Tuesday morning when the instrument in the Marconi cabin on the Campania began to flash, and the signal that was recorded on the tape showed Mr. Woodward, the operator, that he had picked up the station in Cape Cod, 1,800 miles away. The Cape Cod news told about the settlement of the differences that for nearly fifty years kept the Presbyterian and Cumberland Presbyterian Churches apart, of the boiler explosion at Columbus, Ohio, in which six persons lost their lives, and news of the Chicago strike.

At the time the Cape Cod marconigrams began coming in the Campania was about 1,000 miles distant from Poldhu, and as soon as the man on Cape Cod ceased talking, the operator at Poldhu resumed communication, his news relating to the Japanese-Russian war and concluding with a little of Secretary Shaw's tariff speech at Cleveland, Ohio.

When Wednesday's bulletin appeared the Campania was almost exactly in midocean, being at the time about 1,640 miles from Liverpool and 1,616 miles from New York. Again on this day the little daily contained news flashed from both sides of the Atlantic. Some of the dispatches received told of the Tiffany diamond robbery, the dispute between Turkey and Roumania, the closing of the Merchants' Trust Company, the collision on the Third Avenue elevated, the adjournment of the House of Commons, and King Edward's farewell to Mr. Choate. There was also reproduced a message from the eastbound Cunarder Lucania about the yacht race, that liner having passed the Valhalla 866 and the Sunbeam 874 miles east of Sandy Hook.

NEWS FROM BOTH SHORES.

When the passengers on the Campania appeared at the breakfast table Thursday morning they knew that Col. Gorgas, United States Army, had informed the War Department that the yellow fever scare in Panama was about over, that Prince Nakachidze, Governor of Baku, Russia, had been assassinated, and that Admiral Brielef was to assume supreme command of the Russian naval forces in Asiatic waters. It was this edition of The Bulletin that contained the news from Poldhu, which had been received when the Campania was 2,080 miles distant from that station. The messages were among the longest ever received from such a distance by wireless telegraph.

Sandy Hook was only 600 miles away when The Cunard Bulletin went to press Friday morning, and all the news that appeared that day was from the station on Cape Cod. It would have been possible, however, to have received messages from Poldhu, and it was only the nearness of the American station that caused the man at the instrument in Poldhu, nearly 2,500 miles away, to desist.

So much news did the operator at Cape Cod send to the Campania Friday that the editor of The Bulletin set his paper in agate.

Although the Campania's wireless record for the voyage that ended yesterday is one of the greatest, it does not surpass the achievements on her last eastward passage. On that voyage the liner received messages from Poldhu at greater distances than on the voyage that terminated yesterday morning. In The Bulletin of Tuesday, May 9, Purser Graham, the editor of the paper, refers as follows to the record established at midnight of the day previous:

Close on 2,200 miles of blue sea lay between the Campania and the Marconi station at Poldhu, Cornwall, at 9 o'clock last night. The senior telegraphist, who was on watch in the long-distance room, expected to receive signals, but did not anticipate being able to record readable messages. To his surprise, however, dropped her bundles and ran away weeping. Believing that she had been run down, people along the avenue joined in the chase after the automobile. At Ninety-third Street the car was compelled to slow up, as a truck was crossing, so the chauffeur turned the corner into Ninety-third Street.

There were two other men in the auto with the chauffeur and two women, the policeman said. They jumped out and hurried toward Columbus Avenue when the bicycle policeman overhauled the machine and arrested the chauffeur.

By this time the crowd had increased in numbers, and to protect the chauffeur from being mobbed the bicycle policeman summoned three others, the

MISS ROOSEVELT AT CONEY.

Sees Shows and Does Some Shooting—Lights Fail While She Is There.

Miss Alice Roosevelt visited Coney Island last night and took in most of the shows. She was accompanied by a party of friends, including Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Waterbury, J. W. Waterbury, Jr., M. F. Barger, J. J. Blair, and Payne Whitney, in whose automobile the party made the trip down.

Miss Roosevelt spent some time at Bostock's, where she waited to see Bonavita and his lions. After that the party went to Luna Park and Dreamland. They saw the Midget City and the Igorrotes, who recognized Miss Roosevelt, having seen her at the St. Louis Exposition. They crawled by way of recognition, and Miss Roosevelt smiled.

At Luna Park Miss Roosevelt tried her skill with the rifle and astonished her companions by scoring three bullseyes out of five shots. "Wild Bert," the cowboy proprietor of the gallery, told her he had met her father. The party dined at Luna Park in a private box overlooking the circus arena.

For twenty minutes during the visit of the party all the lights in Coney Island were out, except in Luna Park and Dreamland, which have their own power. The failure of the electric power was due to defective wiring.

KILLED IN OKLAHOMA STORM.

Belt in Indian Territory Swept by Tornado—Roads Blocked.

Special to The New York Times.

DALLAS, Texas, May 27.—A destructive storm passed over Platter, Indian Territory, to-day, wrecking many houses, killing one man, and injuring six or seven. Wires are down and 'Frisco trains cannot reach Platter until the tracks are cleared of fallen trees and other debris.

The tornado swept across Oklahoma and Indian Territory, doing damage to nearly a dozen towns. A bulletin to-night states that the town of Cement, Oklahoma, was badly damaged and loss of life is feared. Five miles of track of the Rock Island Road has been washed away. A barn was fired by lightning and five horses perished in the flames.

At Woodville, I. T., several houses were wrecked and one man fatally injured. Three dwelling houses were destroyed at Emory, I. T., and many houses damaged at Colbert. In the part of Chickasahaw Nation, bordering Oklahoma and Indian Territory, the storm was severe.

A section foreman walked into Red River Bridge from Platter and gave the first news of the storm. It is reported that nearly every house in Platter was blown down. The storm cut a swath through the timber 200 yards wide.

The large steel bridge recently built by the Government near Mountain View is in danger. It is anchored by ropes. A section foreman near Randlett is spending the night in a tree caught between washouts.

JUDGE RANDOLPH SHOT.

Alabama Man's Cousin Kills Him Instantly in Street Fight.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 27.—Judge Francis C. Randolph, one of the best-known men in Alabama, was shot and instantly killed this afternoon by John Randolph, a second cousin, in front of the latter's office on South Perry Street.

There are several stories as to the cause of the tragedy, the one receiving most credence being that Judge Randolph had demanded a loan from his cousin, accompanying the request with threats of bodily harm. The two men met this afternoon and it is said that Judge Randolph repeated his threats. John Randolph presented a shotgun and Judge Randolph attempted to draw a revolver, whereupon John Randolph fired two shots in quick succession, one entering the Judge's heart and the other the neck.

Medical aid was summoned, but when a physician arrived Judge Randolph was dead. His slayer was arrested and placed in the county jail. A few weeks ago Judge Randolph was an unsuccessful candidate for the Montgomery Democratic Mayoralty nomination.

OPPOSE CALL FOR CONGRESS.

Elkins and Cullom Want President to Abandon Special Session.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 27.—There was a talk at the White House to-day between the President and Senators Elkins and Cullom about the proposed extra session of Congress in October.

Senator Elkins is against an extra session. He believes Congress will be able to enact all necessary legislation at the regular session which will convene in December.

"Those of us who have been working here since the dissolution of the last Congress," said Mr. Elkins, "do not feel like coming back to Washington in the early Autumn and being pressed into harness, especially when we will be engaged most of the Summer in preparing the material already collected. I believe it is a general wish that an extra session may be avoided. If it is to be called, I hope the President will fix the day as late as possible, and I have so told him."

Senator Cullom also deprecated a called session. If an extra session is to be called, however, he is inclined to an early date rather than waiting until November. Senator Foster of Vermont informed the President that he thought an extra session unnecessary.

TRIED TO MOB CHAUFFEUR.

Crowd Thought He Had Run Down Little Girl.

Shortly before midnight last night a crowd numbering about 300 men, women, and children followed an automobile to the West One Hundredth Street Police Station shouting at the chauffeur:

"Lynch him! Hit him with a club!"

It required the efforts of four policemen to keep the crowd back until the chauffeur was safely in the police station. There he said he was Robert Herb of 827 Seventh Avenue.

Bicycle Policeman Mallon arrested the chauffeur on a charge of speeding his machine. The policeman said he noticed the automobile at One Hundred and Seventh Street coming down Amsterdam Avenue very fast. He pursued, but the chauffeur refused to slacken speed.

At Ninety-sixth Street, the policeman said, the auto almost ran down a little girl who was crossing the avenue carrying an armful of groceries. The child

DALRYMPLE OF GLASGOW HERE TO ADVISE CHICAGO

ADOPTED BUSINESS METHODS

Expense Not Half of the Receipts and Employes Better Paid—Surprised at Unclean Cars Here.

James Dalrymple, the general manager of the municipal owned street car system of Glasgow, Scotland, arrived in New York yesterday on his way to Chicago, where he is to advise Mayor Dunne in regard to the municipalization of the street railways of that city. Mr. Dalrymple was the guest of the Municipal Ownership League of this city at a reception last night given in his honor at the Hoffman House.

He was presented to the public in the light of red fires and to the tune of a squealing bagpipe, tormented by a muscular gentleman dressed in a wholly conventional frock coat, while above the head of the recipient of these honors glared the red and rampant lion on yellow ground, which is the coat of arms of the City of Glasgow. Mr. Dalrymple himself is a very simple, very quiet, and very businesslike man, who apparently knows well what he is talking about, and who does not want to talk more than is absolutely necessary.

Arriving on the Campania yesterday morning, Mr. Dalrymple was received at the pier by James O'Shaughnessy, the personal representative of Mayor Dunne, and by Thomas Gilleran and M. F. Ihmsen, Second Vice President and Secretary, respectively, of the Municipal Ownership League of this city.

In company with these and other representatives of the municipal ownership ideas Mr. Dalrymple inspected the local transportation facilities, traveling successively on, under, and above ground, by Subway express, elevated train, trolley car, and horse car. He traversed the Island of Manhattan lengthwise and crossways from river to river and from the Battery to Grant's Tomb.

The reception began at 8 o'clock, with Mr. Stokes presiding. Several municipal ownership clubs marched in a body to the hotel, headed by brass bands and banners.

The audience gave Mr. Dalrymple an ovation when he rose to speak, and the cheers were deafening when he began his address with the words:

"It's well I'm a Scotchman, or ye might be turning my head."

His words were very much like himself: clear, concise, and going straight for the goal.

"Scotchmen have as a rule pretty hard heads and do not easily get excited," Mr. Dalrymple went on. "To tell the truth, I do not know what all this means. I came here this morning and expected to slip out quietly so as to reach Chicago without delay. I wonder what the Mayor of that city will have to say to me when he gets hold of me. He instructed me not to say a word to anybody—and here I am.

"Well, don't get the idea that I am here to say anything at all about the principle of municipal ownership. I have come here merely to relate a very simple story, and it is for the people of Chicago—and for the people of other cities—to draw their own lesson from it. Glasgow has operated its own street cars for eleven years. In that period we have managed to make the service exceedingly popular. Before we took hold of the service in 1894 it was owned by a single large private company.

"The reason we did take it was that the citizens—all of them—were unsatisfied with the service they were getting, with the wages paid to the men, with the hours of work exacted from the men, and with a great many other things which characterized the service in those days. They decided that the best thing they could do—the only thing, in fact, they could do—was to take the whole system into their own hands.

"We have benefited by that move in many different ways. We have a vastly improved service. We have clean cars. We have clean and well-paid men. Without boasting at all, I think I have the right to say that we have to-day as good a car service as may be found in Great Britain.

"I have been asked especially to say a few words about how we stand in regard to our finances. And in doing so I must again ask you not to put a false construction on my words. I believe that it is quite possible for a municipality to make a terrible mess out of a car service. I believe it is possible for a private company to give good service. It is also possible for a municipality to give good service. I know this is possible.

"The people of Glasgow would not go back to the old days of private ownership for anything in the world. I am not saying that a company could not do as well by the public. I know, in fact, that it could, but it would be doing so, with a somewhat different end in view. For a company has always the shareholders to consider. And I have to admit that you will find people in Glasgow to-day—quite influential people, too—who say that the street-car service is not profitable.

"Yet our service is not an expensive one. The point is that we run the car service, and have always done it, just as if we were a private corporation. The only difference is that whatever gain is made by a reduction of expenses or by an increase of receipts goes to the traveling public, not to private individuals. Our revenue is now about $3,500,000 a year, calculating it roughly.

"The expenses amount to not quite one-half of that sum. Out of the surplus we pay the interest on the invested capital. Then we set aside a sum—a very large sum—to meet the cost of wear and of the obsolescence of the system, for we are perfectly well aware that the trolley will some day have to be superseded by some other kind of system.

"The cost of our system, to install all of it from first to last, was something like $15,000,000. Our debt to-day is about $8,500,000. If a private company had charge of the system still the debt would probably be those fifteen millions and a few more added. We endeavor to give the best possible service at the cheapest possible price, while at the same time we are wiping out the debt as quickly as the circumstances will permit.

"We are bound by Parliament to do so within thirty years from the time the debt was incurred, but we are doing it much faster. I have hopes that within a very few years we shall be wholly debt free, and that then we shall be able to reduce the fare still further. It is now less than 2 cents."

In an interview before the reception Mr. Dalrymple said:

"I see no reason why Chicago, or any other city in this country, should not be able to own its street railways and to run them with as much success as we have achieved at Glasgow. I admit that the proposition at Chicago is a much larger one than the one we had to tackle, but at the bottom it is the same. At Glasgow we own not only the street-car system, but the gas plants and the telephone system. We are prospering with the gas plant and furnishing the people of the city with gas at a rate of less than 50 cents per 1,000 cubic feet.

"We are paying higher wages to our street car employes than the privately owned companies. Salaries used to run from 22s. to 24s. a week for the men. Now they average 30s. The fare has at the same time been reduced until it averages a halfpenny less than half mile. The maximum charge amounts to less than 10 cents in your money.

While traveling around New York Mr. Dalrymple time and again remarked on the unclean appearance of the cars, both inside and outside. Otherwise he abstained carefully from any kind of criticism. Greatest was his surprise when his ear caught the bump-bump-bump of a car [illegible]

SIEGFRIED ROEBLING FOUND.

Boy Missing for a Week Found Safe and Sound in Knoxville.

ASHEVILLE, N. C., May 27.—John A. Roebling, father of Siegfried Roebling, who disappeared from his home here a week ago to-night, received a telegram, dated Knoxville, Tenn., from Judge T. A. Jones of this city, stating that the boy had been found by him there and would be in Asheville Sunday. The boy was reported as being well.

Immediately upon receipt of news that his son had been seen by four different persons in Knoxville, Mr. Roebling sent Judge Jones and Edward Holmes there to search for him.

Siegfried Roebling disappeared from the Asheville school last Sunday morning and was frequently reported from different sources to have gone south. The boy's parents spared no expense in following up the various clues, but nothing tangible was discovered until reports from Knoxville telling that young Roebling had been seen there were received.

Mr. Roebling stated to-night that his son would not be required to go back to the school he had left.

CZAR'S SHIPS NEAR; TOKIO REFUSES NEWS

Correspondent Says He Can't Cable Day's "Historic Events."

BELIEF THAT FIGHT HAS BEGUN

Rojestvensky's Fleet Arrives in the Korean Strait, Apparently Bent on Forcing Battle.

TOKIO, May 27, 9 P. M.—Admiral Rojestvensky's fleet was sighted off Tsu Islands, in the Strait of Korea, to-day.

Transmittible information concerning to-day's historic events in the neighborhood of the Tsu Islands is limited to the bare fact that Rojestvensky's main fleet, steaming in two columns, with the battleships on the starboard and the cruisers and monitors on the port side, appeared in the Strait of Korea.

All other information is withheld by the Japanese authorities, and cable transmission of any other reference to the movements of the Russian fleet or the movements of the Japanese is refused.

[The significant wording of the foregoing dispatch apparently indicates that the sender was aware of important events in the Strait of Korea, but was not allowed to transmit the news. Tsu Island, or Tsu Islands, is in the middle of the strait. At low water there is one island, but at high water a deep sound divides it into two parts. By taking the Korea Strait route, it is almost certain that Rojestvensky wished to force a fight.]

TOKIO, May 27, 2:45 P. M.—All Tokio is eagerly awaiting advices of an engagement between the naval forces of Admirals Togo and Rojestvensky.

It is believed that the fleet of Russian vessels seen at the Saddle Islands (sixty miles southeast of Shanghai) comprised the main fighting strength of Rojestvensky's forces, and that after coaling there the Russians bravely headed for Tsu Islands, electing to give battle in the event of meeting the warships under command of the Japanese Admiral.

The fact that Rojestvensky appears to have used the Formosan Channel has created surprise, as it was generally expected that he would pursue a course eastward of Formosa. This increases the belief that the Russians are anxious to give battle.

It is rumored that the Russian fleet divided into two squadrons as it approached the Korean channels to-day.

The Navy Department refrains from confirming or denying any of the score of reports circulating through the capital, and has promised to advise the public in good time of any developments.

The people have received the news of the prospective fight with elation, so great is their confidence in the prowess of Admiral Togo. While it is thought that a portion of the Russian fleet is certain to reach Vladivostok, it is believed that Togo is bound seriously to cripple the main fighting ships of his adversary.

It is reported that four Russian warships passed through the Kurile Straits, to the westward of Japan, on May 25. The names of the vessels are unknown, but it is possible that they were light cruisers from Admiral Rojestvensky's fleet. Kurile Straits divide the peninsula of Kamchatka and the northernmost islands of Japan.

SAIGON, May 27.—Returning colliers report that Admiral Rojestvensky's fleet arrived off the Saddle Islands on May 24 and proceeded in the direction of the Strait of Korea.

HONGKONG, May 27.—The British steamer St. Kilda, which arrived here to-day from Kuchinotsu, Japan, reports having sighted early in the morning of May 24 forty-five Russian vessels, including battleships, cruisers, torpedo boat destroyers, colliers, a hospital ship, and tugs, 140 miles south-southeast of the Saddle Islands.

The Russians were stationary when first sighted, and most of the colliers were half empty.

Subsequently the Russian vessels steamed away, heading in a north-northwesterly direction.

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Minister Griscom at Tokio has reported to the State Department that the entire fighting strength of the Russian Baltic fleet was seen this morning heading for Tsushima Strait.

Private advices give a rumor that a naval engagement has taken place.

Information has been received here from Shanghai that six Russian war vessels reported at the Saddle Islands have departed. Sixteen of the other vessels remain at Wei-Hai-Wei in spite of the protest of the Chinese Government.

ENTHUSIASM IN RUSSIA.

Officials Without News, but People Sure Rojestvensky Has Won.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sunday, May 28. The Russian Foreign Office and the Admiralty have thus far been entirely independent upon the [illegible] up to midnight were in receipt of no telegrams from the Russian fleet.

The Associated Press is able to announce that the Vladivostok cruisers have left that port and are now acting in general co-operation with Admiral Rojestvensky in accordance with plans prepared for the present emergency. Capt. Broussikoff, who is well known in the United States, commands the armored cruiser Gromoboi.

Rojestvensky's success in reaching the Korean Strait, the gateway to Vladivostok, has aroused something like genuine enthusiasm. The showy Russian capital, arrayed yesterday in gala attire and illuminated in honor of the anniversary of the coronation of Emperor Nicholas, seemed en fête for the occasion. For once St. Petersburg was not pessimistic.

Everywhere the rumor current here that Rojestvensky had defeated Togo was accepted as true, and in the streets the Russian Admiral's name was on every lip. In the cafés and gardens he was toasted as the hero of the hour. In reality, St. Petersburg had only Tokio's advices, but perhaps for once the Russian people, so easily prone to despair, might be pardoned for their premature jubilation.

The authorities, while elated over the news, indulged in no unwarranted rejoicing, but instead waited almost breathlessly for further news. The lights in the Admiralty office burned far into the night, and the fact that no further dispatches arrived from Tokio, where alone the real situation is known, was considered reassuring.

Admiral Wirenius, Chief of the General Staff of the Navy, said:

"If Rojestvensky has cleared the Korean Strait, God bless him; he has open water ahead. If he has succeeded in mystifying the enemy and has entered the Japan Sea with his force unimpaired he has earned the title of master of naval strategy."

At Tsarkoe-Selo, where it is realized that the whole fortune of the war and possibly the fate of the dynasty are staked upon the issue, the greatest anxiety prevails. Emperor Nicholas received yesterday's news with satisfaction, but without elation, as an indication that Rojestvensky has outwitted his adversary and had cleared the difficult entrance to the Japan Sea. Throughout his Majesty has displayed the greatest confidence in Rojestvensky's ability to turn the trick, but with the arrival of the decisive moment he showed nervousness, and repeatedly ordered court officials to inquire of the Admiralty and the Foreign Office for dispatches, but neither Ministry could relieve the Emperor's suspense.

Capt. von Essen of Port Arthur fame, one of the most capable of Russian naval officers, is one of those who believe that Rojestvensky's arrival in the Korean Strait is not an affair of mystification, but is due to the relative strength of the fleets. He expressed yesterday the utmost confidence that Rojestvensky would reach Vladivostok without fighting a decisive battle, Togo's fleet being, in his opinion, too weak to meet that of Russia in open combat.

It is undeniable that many thoughtful Liberals display what is almost consternation over the success that thus far has attended Rojestvensky's voyage. A decisive victory for him, they believe, might so strengthen the Government as not only to destroy all prospects of peace but to enable the Government, if it chooses, to stifle the whole programme of reforms and postpone for many years the realization of the Liberals' dreams of a Parliament and a Constitution.

THINK TOGO WILL WAIT.

Foreign Officers Expect He Will Let Russians Reach Vladivostok.

PARIS, May 27.—The naval situation in the Far East has been discussed between French and American naval officers, the latter including several who took part in the Spanish-American war.

Both the French and Americans took the view that the Japanese would permit the Russian fleet to enter Vladivostok, which thereafter would become the scene of a repetition of the naval situation at Santiago and Port Arthur.

A French officer said it was characteristic of Russian sailors to seek the support of land fortifications, where they adopted a defensive attitude, making sorties under cover of the guns of the forts instead of adopting open-sea tactics.

On the other hand it was pointed out that the Japanese had everything to gain by permitting the Russians to enter Vladivostok instead of taking the chances of a sea fight. Once inside Vladivostok the Russians would require coal and provisions, and it would be impossible to secure these, as Oyama would cut the land communications and Togo would prevent merchant vessels from carrying supplies to Vladivostok. This would present much the same situation as at Santiago and Port Arthur, with the Russians keeping under the shore defenses and the Japanese maintaining a blockade outside and trying to obstruct the channels.

Both the French and American officers believed that such a situation would result in prolonged delay, the final result depending upon Rojestvensky's audacity in hazarding a sortie and a fight in the open sea.

OYAMA ASSUMES OFFENSIVE.

Japanese Company Ambushed—Russians Prepare to Enter Mongolia.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 27.—A dispatch from Gen. Linevitch, dated May 26, says:

"There was no change on May 24 in the position of the armies on our left flank.

"The Japanese on May 24 assumed the offensive from Ehrdagan in the west toward Bankhegan. Our troops ambushed a company of Japanese, killing or wounding over thirty of them."

CHANCHAVADZE, Manchuria, May 27.—The reconnaissance of Gen. Mistchenko, which beyond doubt was the most brilliant cavalry exploit of the war, was well planned and dashingly executed. It was fruitful of much information of the greatest value.

The Japanese prepared a trap for Gen. Mistchenko's return and flung a strong force of infantry, cavalry, and artillery across the line of his retreat, but the Russian cavalry after a bold feint in one direction cut its way through. The total loss to the Japanese in killed and prisoners was over 500.

The attention of all the armies is now directed toward the fleet. The editions of The Army Messenger containing the press dispatches are inadequate to supply the demand, and are sold out to crowds of soldiers as soon as they reach the station.

PARIS, May 27.—The Temps publishes a dispatch from St. Petersburg saying that the Foreign Ministry announces that the Russian armies in Manchuria are preparing to enter Mongolia, but will not operate in the direction of Peking, in order to avoid a collision with the Chinese troops commanded by Gen. Ma, which would provoke intervention on the part of the powers.

The sole reason for the Russian operations, it is added, is to counteract the threatening movements of the Japanese in Mongolia.

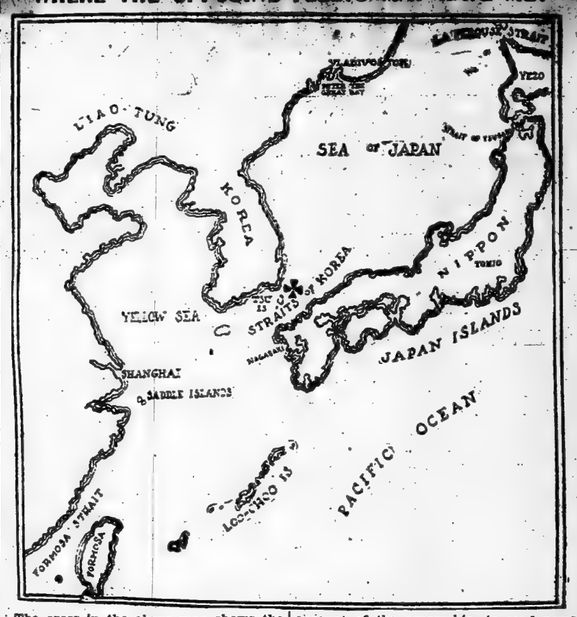
WHERE THE OPPOSING FLEETS MAY HAVE MET



The cross in the above map shows the point where, it is thought, a great naval battle may have been fought yesterday. After leaving the Saddle Islands Admiral Rojestvensky steered a direct course for the Straits of Korea, and he was off the Tsu Islands yesterday morning. What occurred then is only a matter of conjecture, but the significant wording of a dispatch from Tokio, in which the correspondent declared that he was unable, on account of the censorship, to send news of yesterday's "historic events," warrants the supposition that an engagement was fought.

Should the battle not have been fought or should Rojestvensky have been victorious, he has a journey of 640 miles before he reaches Vladivostok, but the passage of the Korea Straits would greatly simplify the problem confronting him, as he would have clear water between him and his objective port.

WHITE-HAIRED MAN RUN DOWN

Women Hysterical on the Open Car That Caught Him—He May Die.

Levi B. Wilber, a violinist, sixty-five years old, living at 69 West One Hundred and Eighth Street, was run over by an Eighth Avenue car at Central Park West and One Hundred and Ninth Street last night. He was taken to the J. Hood Wright Hospital in a critical condition.

Wilber was crossing Central Park West toward the park side. Several automobiles coming from One Hundred and Tenth Street were approaching, and a southbound car was coming along too. Wilber dodged between the automobiles and went around the southbound car. He did not see a northbound open car approaching, and before he could jump back the fender had struck him. He fell so that his right leg was under the front wheels and the wheels passed over it.

The car was crowded. Women aboard, who saw the white-haired man unconscious under the car, fainted or became hysterical.

A physician, Dr. Clinton Stevenson of 1,227 Lexington Avenue, was on the car. He jumped off, and did what he could for the unconscious man. A Battalion Chief of the Fire Department was also on the car, and sent a call for an ambulance.

Dr. Stevenson made a tourniquet of his handkerchief and the policeman's night stick and stopped the flow of blood. Wilber was then taken to the hospital. The motorman, Patrick Herlihy, was arrested.

RINGS AND MONEY VANISHED.

Grocer's Boy Arrested, Says He Threw Gems in Yard.

Upon returning from the theatre at 11 o'clock last night, Mr. and Mrs. William Bogan found the grocer's boy waiting at their home, at 278 St. Ann's Avenue, to deliver groceries. They invited him in, and Mrs. Bogan left the boy in the dining room to go into the kitchen.

A minute later she discovered that her purse, containing five diamond rings and some money, was missing from a sideboard in the dining room. The boy was questioned, but denied all knowledge of the matter.

A policeman was summoned just as the boy was leaving the house and placed him under arrest. Then, according to the police, the boy admitted taking the purse, and handed it over to the policeman. There was only one ring in it. The boy said he had thrown the other four diamond rings into the rear yard, expecting to come back later and get them. He was taken to the Alexander Avenue Police Station, where he said he was Joseph Mackey, thirteen years old, of 375 Brook Avenue.

Police Captain Ward sent five policemen to make a search of the yard for the missing rings, but up to midnight the policemen had not found them. Young Mackey was locked up.

TAFT ON TREATY MAKING URGES EXECUTIVE RIGHT

He Defends Roosevelt's Contention as to Arbitration.

LOOKS FOR CHANGE OF VIEW

Delegation of Delegated Power Will Come to be Recognized by Senate, He Thinks.

CINCINNATI, May 27.—Differences between the President and the Senate over peace treaties were discussed to-day by W. H. Taft, Secretary of War, in a speech at the commencement of the Cincinnati Law School. His subject was "Delegation of Delegated Power." He said:

"While a recent attempt to maintain a delegation of delegated power was defeated for the time, I think, with deference to the great lawyers who denied its validity, that such delegation of delegated power will ultimately come to be recognized as permissible.

"The treaty-making power of the United States is committed to the President by and with the consent of the Senate, two-thirds thereof concurring. A treaty when properly made and confirmed is the law of the land. The treaty-making power is therefore analogous to the executive power. It is a delegated power, and the rule against the delegation of such delegated power is certainly as strong as against the delegation of legislative power. This is expressly recognized in the decision of the Supreme Court in respect to the reciprocity clause of the McKinley bill.

"By a treaty with a number of powers the United States agreed to the establishment of an international court at The Hague before which might be submitted controversies and differences between the contracting powers, and this treaty referred to and contemplated the making of general treaties of arbitration between each two of the contracting parties.

"These treaties were submitted to the Senate for confirmation, and the Senate, contending that the special 'agreement' provided in the second clause could not have any validity on the United States unless it was concurred in by the Senate, changed the word 'agreement' to 'treaty,' in order that this construction should not be doubtful. The President regarded a treaty agreeing to arbitration as a mere agreement to agree, and as making no successful step toward general arbitration of differences.

"The position of the President was that, for the purpose of facilitating the settlement of international disputes, it was within the competence of the President and the Senate, as the treaty-making power, to agree with another nation that all controversies within a certain defined class should be submitted to The Hague tribunal, and to provide that the President might, without further consulting the Senate, by agreement with the representatives of the other power, define clearly the matter in dispute, the scope of the powers of the arbitrators, the periods to be fixed for the formation of the arbitral tribunal and the safe stages of the procedure.

"The argument is that, in order that the treaty-making power may be efficiently used, and that international controversies be speedily sent before a court without awaiting the slow process of confirmation by the Senate, the President and the Senate may, after defining the classes of controversies to be settled by arbitration and fixing the court before which such classes of controversies are to be settled, confer upon the Executive the power to decide for the United States whether the controversy in question is within the class of controversies defined in the treaty, and confer the power, by subordinate agreement, to define the issues of the controversy and to fix the details of the procedure.

"The mere mandate to the President to decide whether a controversy is within a class of controversies with respect to which those two nations have by a binding treaty agreed that they may be submitted to The Hague Tribunal, is not a delegation of the treaty-making power at all. It is a mere conferring of Executive discretion, involving the construction of a statute, or, what is the same thing, a treaty.

"It is to be hoped that the question may be re-examined at some future time and that some method may be devised by which general arbitration treaties may be promptly applied to international differences without having to secure, in each instance of their application, the consent of two-thirds of the Senate."

TAXPAYERS AS PAUPERS GET AID FROM NORWALK

Disclosures of Investigation Stir Citizens to Act.

"ORPHANS" CARRIED 20 YEARS

Rent and Grocery Orders Land in Pockets of Politicians—Allowance Cut $1,500 a Month.

Special to The New York Times.

SOUTH NORWALK, Conn., May 27.—Since the town meeting here last night, at which a special committee presented its report on the "outdoor aid" department, the problem of its poor has begun to agitate the united township of Norwalk and South Norwalk in an unusual way. It was learned then that many persons, comparatively well-to-do, some among them taxpayers, have been on the pauper list and in receipt of monthly aid of from $11 to $20, ever since the department was established, or for upward of twenty years.

"While we still are inclined to look upon this vicious throwing away of the people's money as the result of nothing worse than neglect and gross mismanagement on the part of the officers," said William A. Warden, Chairman of the special committee, "we discovered some things to cause question.

"We found, for instance, that much of the money finally landed in the pockets of certain powerful politicians who own the tenements in which the majority of the beneficiaries of the outside aid department lived. These tenements were in such unspeakable condition of neglect that no person with his own good money to pay for house rent, providing he had a vestige of self-respect, would care to take up abode in them."

Outdoor aid is dispensed, not in ready cash, but in orders for rent or groceries. These orders go direct to the landlord or grocer. It has developed from the investigation that nearly all the persons receiving outdoor aid have been ordered to purchase their groceries, not in the store nearest their homes, but from the New York Grocery Company, in which some of the prominent local politicians, it is said, are interested.

Out of a total of 105 cases in Norwalk and South Norwalk where outdoor aid had been given, only 25 cases were worthy.

From a member of the committee it was learned that one of the paupers was paying taxes to the town on $3,000 of property. The woman, he said, owned two houses, of which she rented one and occupied the other. She received $11 a month in aid from the town. Another pauper, a man, is the owner of a farm and has a bank account.

The munificence on the part of the Board of Selectmen during the last few years has cost the taxpayers close to $15,000 a year, equal to the aggregate amounts spent for the same purpose by the cities of New Haven and Hartford. South Norwalk has only 20,000 inhabitants, while the two cities have an estimated population together of 150,000.

The investigation which led to the present disclosures was begun at the instigation of John Devine, a young Democrat, who was elected a Selectman last Fall. The other two members are Republicans, and the investigation was directly due to a squabble between Mr. Devine and one of the latter, who stood sponsor for a "pauper" to whom Mr. Devine insisted no further aid should be given.

In more than twenty cases the committee discovered that the beneficiaries had been placed on the lists as orphans too young to support themselves, and had remained on the lists to the present, though now grown up. In one case a young woman engaged to be married to a well-to-do business man of Norwalk, it was said, was in receipt of a monthly stipend up to the time the committee began work. Then she left town.

The meeting at which the report was presented was the most exciting one in the history of South Norwalk. The Town Hall on Wall Street was packed to the doors, and there were loud protests from many of those in attendance when it was found that the committee's report cited the cases of the wealthy paupers by numbers instead of names. But the protests were of no avail.

The committee found, Mr. Warden said, that where the paupers were not actually owners of property they were well able to work. Instead they received the town's generosity and led shiftless lives.

Mrs. Lizzie Gayos, a Polish woman, for ten years has been in receipt of $11 a month from the poor fund. She has been at work all the time. When the committee came to investigate her case, it was found that she had been sending an amount almost equal to what the town had given her to a son in her native land. Now, the woman told them, he is fighting the Japanese in Manchuria.

The sensation of the meeting was furnished by ex-Burgess William McMullen, who, when the report had been read, got up and pointing his finger to a number of former Selectmen in the audience, cried:

"If we have to have two coadjutors to look after the Selectmen we pay $3,000 a year to administer the affairs of this town we ought to be proud of them. Up in Windham County they pay their Selectmen $55 a year, and yet no such rascality was ever heard of up there.

"Gentlemen, I am responsible for every word I say. I know what I am talking about. Look, look at these thieving rascals here. Look at these men who pretend to be Godly church goers—such rascally fellows ought not to be allowed to remain alive in any decent community."

The meeting voted to cut off the monthly amount of outdoor aid by about $1,500.

MAYOR WEAVER WILL FIGHT ON GAS RING

position to-day with his position a week ago and by realising the almost superhuman efforts he had put forth to avert the smash. Mr. Murphy of Tammany Hall is called a boss and so is ex-Gov. Odell. Durham would regard both of them as powerless politicians and babies in politics. Neither of them begins to have the strangle hold on their own organizations and on the city and State that Durham had one week ago.

Everything was in his hands, government, people, and courts. Though only a city boss in name, his alliance with Penrose extended his sway through the State and made the Legislature his convenient tool to be used whenever necessary; and it was so used with great frequency. Even the Governor was found executing Durham's will.

There seemed to be no way whatever of getting a hold on him. In New York there are numberless ways by which, in a great civic uprising, a boss's power may be smashed. But Durham's tentacles had a grip on everything that could be used in a political fight. The people were tied hand and foot and gagged before ever the fight began.

Yet Durham has fallen and fallen in a most unprecedented manner. The instrument of his downfall has been his own strongest weapon—Councils. The main seat of his power is there, and yet it is Councils which has routed him.

The spectacular, bizarre campaign of citizens, in which Councilmen were hunted down in automobiles, routed out of bed and held up on the streets, threatened, boycotted, and intimidated, has done the trick. The Councilmen have held out as long as they dared and have surrendered and smashed the gas grab beyond any possible recovery.

Pressure on Councilmen.

Point has been lent to the spectacle by Durham's counter campaign. In Penrose's office he has sat day by day, surrounded by the senior Senator from Pennsylvania and by Sub-Bosses McNichol and Seger, with their counsel, A. S. L. Shields, who defended Quay when that statesman was tried. They have rounded up Councilmen and have warned and threatened them, telling them that they must stick by the organization.

In practically every case the Councilman went out swearing undying fealty to the organization, and yet within a few hours he would collapse under the pressure of his neighbors and go over to Weaver.

On the people's part it has been a ward-by-ward campaign, each ward attending to the frightening of its own Councilmen. Durham, on the contrary, has summoned the Councilmen from all over the city to Penrose's office and bulldozed them in a bunch. His failure has been complete and utter. To-night the boss is dazed by the crash, and unable to understand it. He cannot figure out how it has happened that in one week the finest and strongest organization in the country has gone to smash.

The wiseacres are attributing his fall to the lack of Quay's presence. They are reminding each other that this is the first serious fight the organization has ever been in where it did not have the inspiration of that sage old fox's counsel, and they are pointing to the fact that in every big fight the old leader won out, no matter how serious the situation seemed to be.

How much truth there is in this, no man can say. It is evident that if it is really true, there is hope for Philadelphia; for if it was merely the genius of Quay which made the machine invulnerable and impervious, now that he is gone there is every opportunity for citizens to purify Philadelphia, and with it Pennsylvania.

People's Triumph, Says Weaver.

The result made no change in the manner of the ruddy-faced, perpetually smiling little Mayor.

"I consider it a great triumph for the people," he said in an off-hand way, and he seemed pleased, but no more so than he has been in every day of the fight.

The fight will go on. Weaver, of course, cannot relax his efforts in any direction, or the organization would crush him. He has got to go into court on Wednesday and defend his appointment of Potter and Acker. The discouraged organization is to-day, for the first time, skeptical about the decision of the court. Outside of the organization there is great confidence that the Supreme Court will uphold Weaver.

As for Councils, the fight there is really over, though the ring will not admit it. The leaders are still talking doggedly of defeating the confirmation of Potter and Acker and of impeaching Weaver. Outside the ring nobody believes in anything of the sort. It is being said everywhere:

"If the Councilmen couldn't hold out for the gas lease, how will they ever be dragooned into impeaching Weaver? They wouldn't dare."

The Weaver impeachment is dead, and even if Durham insists on it, there is no chance for it. It is not believed that Durhame can even hold the Councils together against the appointments of Potter and Acker. The ring is on the run.

The thing which really convinced the ring of its defeat was the surrender of Councilman Edwards of Germantown. When he fell before the rush of public sentiment he who had been burned in effigy by his own neighbors without minding it in the least, the ring for the first time got a thoroughly clear impression of what public opinion can do.

Reform Movement May Spread.

The reform leaders are going right ahead and show no indication of being satisfied with their victory. There will be an election here next November, and good judges predict that long before it comes off the ring candidates, who have already been nominated, will have withdrawn from the ticket, and respectable figureheads put in their places. Henry C. Ransley, who heads the ticket, is a strong ring man. He is the President of Select Council. A bet that Ransley will not be on the ticket in November could not find a taker at any odds.

Chairman Winston of the Committee of Seventy said, to-day:

"Unquestionably the reform which has been started in Philadelphia will extend throughout the State. The next opportunity for the people to express themselves at the polls will be at the election of Sheriff. The city party will have a candidate—a strong candidate—in the field, and he will be elected. Our candidate for Sheriff will not only have public sentiment behind him, but a perfect organization in every division of every ward in the city.

"The work of organization has been going actively forward since February. The ward meetings which have been held throughout the city in the last few weeks were managed almost entirely by the leaders of the city party. We are glad of the influential and able support which has come to our movement from those who formerly supported the machine organization. There will be a big breaking away from the old organization, and many of its active workers will in future understand Mr. Dolan's position now to be that he wishes to hold on to the present gas lease. I can easily understand why he desires to do that. But if I can have any influence in this fight, and this community will stand by the Committee of Seventy to the end, Mr. Dolan will pay for a continuance of the lease after Jan. 1, 1908. He can easily afford to pay at least $10,000,000 to the city for the privilege of its continuance until 1927. The city will be very foolish if it does not either take back its gas works or exact a good round sum for the continuance of the present arrangement.

To Investigate Betterments.

"The Committee of Seventy, when the right time arrives, will take steps to ascertain just how much the United Gas Improvement Company has expended in so-called betterments and extensions. There is much to be investigated in that connection, and the United Gas Improvement Company's statements are by no means to be taken for granted."

The lease was for thirty years, running from 1897, but it was provided that in 1907 the city could take the property back, paying the United Gas Improvement Company's expenses in improving and maintaining the works. That will be about $20,000,000.

The prospect for a resumption of municipal ownership, however, is not very good. Philadelphia used to own the gas works, and the result was that the political gang in charge made it the headquarters of corruption. The probability is that municipal ownership will not be favored for this reason, but that advantageous terms will be insisted upon in any renewal of the lease.

The argument on the injunction, which was set for Monday, has been postponed until Wednesday because of the death of Justice Dean. This morning Joseph C. Auerbach of the New York law firm of Davies, Stone & Auerbach came here to consult with the Mayor. Mr. Auerbach has been engaged by the Committee of Seventy. He said that his firm would work with Elihu Root, the Mayor's counsel.

All over the city to-night mass meetings are being held. There is no sign whatever of a subsidence of the wave of popular wrath. Men with Weaver buttons are in evidence throughout the town, shouting, "Show your colors!" Picture postcards are being circulated, representing prison windows with the face of a Councilman peering from behind the bars. Another souvenir postal card represent Councilmen staggering along under loads of booty, driven by Durham's horsewhip.

There are any quantity of such cards, but these are the most striking, with the single exception of a postal which shows a Councilman hanging from the limb of a tree. Father Penn is pulling the rope, and the card says: "A word to the wise is sufficient."

LET FREIGHT RATES ALONE.

So Say Visiting European Railway Men Traveling in Magnificence.

Seventy-five delegates to the International Railway Congress arrived here yesterday on the Albany boat at the end of a long tour of the United States as the guests of the American Railway Association. They came on three special trains, magnificently equipped, which made stops at Altoona, Pittsburg, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Chicago, Niagara Falls, Montreal, Saratoga, Schenectady, and Albany, and they expressed themselves as profoundly impressed with railroad development in this country and with the indications of industrial prosperity on every hand.

What especially attracted the attention of the travelers was the telephone system. There was an instrument in the observation car of each of the three sections of the train, and these were connected with central immediately on the arrival of the train at each stopping place. When the linemen attached the wires to the cars before the trains came to a standstill at Saratoga and conversation with Chicago was had within five minutes, some of the visitors could hardly believe their own ears.

Some of the travellers talked about government regulation to fix freight rates. Rodolph Fane de Salis, director of the North Staffordshire Railway in England said:

"While corporations of such magnitude and importance as railway companies cannot expect to stand outside of proper and legitimate State regulation, English experience shows that such regulation can easily be overdone, and is likely to injure the very interests it is intended for the public for whose benefit it is intended."

Representatives of the English Railway Clearing House spoke even more strongly on this subject.

"Government regulation in any form is as bad as possible," declared Lewis Wood, Assistant Secretary of the Railway Clearing House. "What we have in England is mild compared with that in some places on the Continent, but the whole idea is pernicious. It can only result in inflexibility. It is made practically impossible for railroads to lower their rates to meet a special need because it is practically impossible to raise them again when the need is past, so that the original rate is the proper and satisfactory one for everybody concerned. I hope you Americans will keep away from any more stringent regulation than you have now, that is entirely sufficient if the Inter-State Commerce Commission goes about its work in the right way."

AMBASSADOR REID SAILS.

Mr. Choate Will Leave England for Home May 30.

Whitelaw Reid, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States to the Court of St. James's, sailed for his new post on the American liner Philadelphia yesterday morning.

He was accompanied by Mrs. Reid and his daughter, Miss Jean Templeton Reid. Mr. Choate, the retiring Ambassador, will sail for home on May 30.

"There is really nothing I can say," said Mr. Reid, "that I have not said in public before. I am unhappy in one way to leave New York, and happy in another to go to this high post to which I have been called. In no time during the past 129 years have the relations between Great Britain and our own country been so close as they have been in the past year. The bond of fellowship is steadily growing between the two peoples."

Jocularly Mr. Reid said: "My digestion is good," and added that he thought he would be able to stand the dinners in England, which a London paper has termed the "brutal treatment of the American Ambassador."

Among those who were present to bid Mr. Reid and his family farewell were Mrs. D. O. Mills, Mrs. Eleanor Sears, Miss Margaret Lyx, Mrs. Franklin Roosevelt, and Mrs. Cowles.

Others who sailed on the Philadelphia were: Henry M. Doremus, Mayor of Newark; Capt. William S. Gurgnard, Military Attaché to the Embassy at Paris; Mr. and Mrs. Henry Phippe, the Baroness de Baurs, and his Excellency Jean Kolosrivoff, President of the Council of the Ministry of Public Works of Russia.

LONDON, May 27.—Dorchester House, the finest private residence in London, has been renovated from top to bottom and is now in complete readiness for Ambassador and Mrs. Reid, who will go there direct from Plymouth, where they are due to arrive June 8. The new Ambassador will have an audience of King Edward and present his credentials early the following week, and will immediately find himself in a whirl of royal, diplomatic, and society functions connected with the visit of the King of Spain to England and the marriage of Crown Prince Gustave [illegible] and Norway to Princess Margaret of Connaught.

EXPLOSION WAS UNION LABOR PLOT

Dynamiters Stole a Boat to Reach the Hackensack Draw.

FAILED THROUGH IGNORANCE

Plotters Knew Little of Explosives, and the P. R. R. Structure Wasn't Damaged.

That the new five-hundred-thousand-dollar drawbridge of the Pennsylvania Railroad across the Hackensack River at the foot of Newark Avenue, Jersey City, was not demolished yesterday morning, when a heavy charge of dynamite was set off at its middle span, is due, according to the officials of the road, to the ignorance of the would-be wreckers of the handling of high explosives.

It was positively established yesterday that the explosion was the result of a plot to blow up the bridge. The police of Jersey City and the railroad detectives are working on the theory that the conspirators were union men, disgruntled because organized labor has not been recognized in the building of the structure.

Proof of the plot was furnished by a boat, stolen some time Friday night from the boathouse of John Gneiss, near Turnpike Bridge, and which was found where it had floated ashore a short distance from the scene of the explosion.

The belief is that the dynamiters rowed to the bridge, put the charge of dynamite in place and set it off with a time fuse or by an exploder, using a wire connection. The charge evidently lacked compactness, for the damage to the bridge was but trifling.

No connection is traced between the explosion of dynamite at the bridge and the explosion Friday afternoon at the excavation for the new Pennsylvania terminal in Manhattan, either by the police or officers of the company. Subcontractor O'Hara, who is working under Alderman Gaffney, head of the New York Trucking and Contracting Company, reported yesterday to the police of the West Thirty-seventh Street Station that the explosion was due to the touching off of an old charge from some accidental cause.

There was much excitement in Jersey City yesterday morning as a result of the attempt to destroy the bridge. It was 1:30 o'clock when there was a flash, and a column of water and wreckage was hurled high up from the middle of the river, under the new drawbridge, which is about 400 feet long and almost completed.

A pile driver on a float was moored to the bridge, and in the cabin was William Knapp, a watchman. On the shore near by was Frank Kirk, another watchman. The shock shattered the windows of the cabin on the pile driver's float and threw Kirk off his balance. He only saved himself from falling into the river by clutching a post. Both men declare they saw nothing suspicious prior to the explosion. It was some time before it was learned that there had been no damage.

About a month ago complaint was made to a United States Government Inspector in Newark that the Pennsylvania Railroad was driving piles in the Hackensack River without a permit. The Hackensack is a navigable stream, and a permit was required. The work was stopped until a permit was procured. It was reported yesterday that this complaint was made by union workmen.

The officials said they did not know who made the complaint. William Mershon, an assistant master carpenter regularly employed by the railroad, was assaulted by six men three weeks ago on the bridge near the new drawbridge. He received a beating which laid him up for a day. Railroad men attribute the attack to toughs instigated by union men.

Assistant Engineer Miller, who has charge of the work on the drawbridge, received a letter through the mail a few days after the Mershon assault which was signed "John Doe," and purported to be written by a member of an Iron workers' union. It gave the names of the men, who, the writer said, assaulted Mershon. It was incoherent, and Mr. Miller thought the work of a crank and paid no attention to it.

There were also rumors yesterday that threatening letters had been received by President Cassatt and other officials of the Pennsylvania, and therefore the public for whose benefit it is intended."

Superintendent F. L. Sheppard denied them.

"I have received none," he said, "and neither has any other officer so far as I know. Possibly some foreman may have done so and not reported the fact. I have not heard that the President of the company has received a threatening letter.

"In regard to the cause of the explosion, dynamite might have been used on the drawbridge for setting it off with an exploder. Persons could have operated from a boat, using a wire connection to set off the dynamite. The drawbridge could be approached only in a boat.

"We have in the past had trouble with 'entertainment committees,' this having occurred in the time of Sam Parks, who died in Sing Sing Prison. I sent for him on that occasion and he straightened that out all right. I have not heard of any trouble since."

The drawbridge is to replace the one now in use as a passenger train bridge. It has been constructed on floats and piles about 160 feet south of the passenger bridge. When finished it will be towed to the place of the old one and secured by piles.

FISHER SAYS HE IS THE GOULDS' VICTIM

HIS ARREST FOR FRAUD

Only Interested Merchants' Trust in Virginia Power—Says Frank Gould Went In with His Eyes Open.

With the receivers, Otto T. Bannard of the New York Trust Company and Douglas Robinson, away in Vermont looking over the Rutland properties to see what may be saved out of them, the case of the Merchants' Trust Company has resolved itself for the present into a contest of explanations between the Goulds, who were interested in several of the enterprises that brought the institution to grief, and George E. Fisher of 37 Wall Street, who for more than a dozen years has been trying to develop the street railroad facilities of Richmond, Va.

Fisher said yesterday that he had discovered the connection between his arrest last Fall on the four indictments now pending against him in the District Attorney's office and the present effort to lay at his door the responsibility for the Merchants' Trust failure.

He was arrested here in December on the complaint of P. H. Corr and T. A. Blythe of Philadelphia, who said that he had defrauded them out of $3,500 each, in a transaction involving some notes of the Southern Textile Company. Eventually four charges developed, one that he had converted a note of $10,000 of the Textile Company to his own use, and one that he had similarly converted a note for $15,000, the other two indictments growing out of the grievance of the men from Philadelphia.

The law firm of Battle, & Marshall, which is now doing the talking for Frank J. Gould, happened then to be the firm that pushed the prosecution of Mr. Fisher for the Philadelphians. The case dragged on for weeks and finally the Grand Jury found the indictments which are still somewhere around the office of District Attorney Jerome.

In his explanation of these things, yesterday Fisher told this story:

"I had become interested in the Southern Textile Company prior to the Fall of 1903, and had advanced considerable money to it at one time and another. About that time the company needed $20,000, and made two notes for $10,000 each, which were charged to my account as trustee until I should negotiate them. I was unable to do this, and accordingly I advanced the money myself, as the books of the company will show. When the notes came due the Southern Textile Company couldn't pay them, and I accordingly accepted two new notes, one for $15,000 and one for $5,462.50, representing the original amount with interest.

The $15,000 note was secured by the indorsement of P. H. Corr, T. A. Blythe, myself, C. E. Brown, T. W. Pratt, and D. B. King, the individual liability being $3,000 each, except in the case of the last two, who were liable for $1,500 each. I sold it to Mr. Langdon in the Fall of 1903, and when it became due it was defaulted. Mr. Corr and Mr. Blythe sent over $7,500, which Mr. Langdon received, as representing a part of the funds due on the indorsement. Corr and Blythe got $8,000 in the bonds of the company and $7,500 in its stock, according to the agreement under which the indorsement was given.

"So the matter stood for a year. Finally they had me arrested, for what I didn't know until this other matter came out, and I found Battle & Marshall representing the Goulds."

Mr. Fisher explicitly denied that he had anything to do with interesting the Merchants' Trust in any business matter, but the Virginia Passenger and Power Company, and he declared that up to the time that Frank J. Gould became personally interested in the property the only connection that the trust company had with the Richmond concern was through loans aggregating altogether not more than $400,000.

"The statement of Mr. Gould's attorneys that he found the trust company loaded up to the handle with Virginia Passenger and Power securities is ridiculous," he continued. "As a matter of fact, Mr. Gould did not come into the matter at all until after his experts had made the most careful examination of the property, and the biggest loans of the trust company on Richmond collateral were made after Mr. Gould came in and I had stepped out of the trust company. The same may be said of the statement that I had the trust company invest in the Richmond securities. In the syndicate that took up part of the loans, Frank J. Gould had $400,000, Dr. Munn $50,000, Mrs. Munn $100,000, the Central National Bank $200,000, and Henry Sampson $50,000.

"As far as the Rutland properties go, I never had anything to do with any of them. Neither was I in any way interested in the Hudson Valley Railroad proposition. The Rutland matter, I believe, was brought into the Merchants' Trust Company by Charles A. Gardiner, who was attorney for the trust company at its foundation, and personal attorney for the Goulds. Henry Burdett, a cousin of Mr. Gardiner's wife, interested Mr. Gardiner in it. The Hudson Valley scheme had just as little connection with my affairs, and the statement that I dictated the investment of trust company funds in it or loaned the funds on it is absolutely false."

Battle & Marshall had nothing to add to their previous statement concerning Mr. Fisher and the Merchants' Trust Company, in which they said that the interest he persuaded Frank Gould to take in it cost the young man $2,500,000.

LOOKING INTO RUTLAND R. R.

Receivers for Merchants' Trust on an Investigation Tour.

RUTLAND, Vt., May 27.—Otto Bannard, President of the New York Trust Company, and Douglas Robinson of New York, who are in charge of the Merchants' Trust Company of New York, arrived here to-day to examine the affairs of the Rutland Street Railway Company and People's Gas Light Company and their holding corporation, the Chittenden Power Company. President Bannard and Mr. Robinson held a conference with General Manager David Fox, and afterward inspected the various properties. Construction work has been suspended by the Chittenden Power Company. General Manager Fox says he expects operations will be resumed in the near future.

ASKS KILBURN TO REPLY.

Gov. Higgins Takes Up Charges Relating to the Merchants' Trust.

ALBANY, May 27.—Gov. Higgins to-day made his first public comment on the charges recently filed with him against Superintendent of Banks Kilburn. He said:

"I have received the petition of George Von Utassy, verified May 24, 1906, setting forth on information and belief certain acts of alleged misconduct on the part of F. D. Kilburn, Superintendent of Banks, in connection with the affairs and supervision of the Merchants' Trust Company of New York, and praying that [illegible] to determine whether [illegible] all founded, to the end [illegible] office.

"The accused officer has been Superintendent of Banks since 1897. He is a gentleman in whose honesty and uprightness of purpose I have the fullest confidence. I have furnished to him a copy of the petition and requested from him a statement of the official relations of the Banking Department with the Merchants' Trust Company during the past three years. Upon receiving his statement I will determine what course to pursue."

RECEIVERS FOR HUDSON VALLEY

BALLSTON, N. Y., May 27.—Justice Henry T. Kellogg has appointed Jarvis P. O'Brien of Troy receiver of the Hudson Valley Railway Company on application of Daniel P. Halpin. Mr. Halpin has sued the Hudson Valley Railway Company and the Merchants' Trust Company of New York to foreclose fifty bonds of the railway company, which he holds, and which were secured by a mortgage given to the trust company.

The receiver's bond is fixed at $100,000. George R. Salisbury of Saratoga is appointed referee in the proceedings to sell the railway after it has been advertised for six weeks. Justice Kellogg's order provides that any bondholder or creditor who has a lien may participate in the judgment.

WARNING TO GRAND JURORS.

Judge Dixon Compels Them to Pass on Police Neglect.

Supreme Court Justice Jonathan Dixon called the Hudson County Grand Jury before him in Jersey City yesterday and delivered a special charge in relation to poolroom gambling and the duty of the jurors in relation thereto. He said it was not enough that the Grand Jury should have indicted Jeremiah Murphy, the alleged proprietor of the large poolroom in Newark Avenue raided a month ago. He said the clerks arrested should have been indicted with Murphy, and also the proprietors of the saloon on the first floor, who leased the premises on the second floor to Murphy.

Justice Dixon also censured the Grand Jury for reconsidered on May 19 a resolution adopted on May 12 directing Prosecutor Speer to prepare indictments against Chief of Police Benjamin Murphy, who is not related to Jeremiah Murphy, and Police Captain John F. Cody. He said it was ridiculous to suppose that a poolroom could be carried on for months, perhaps years, within a stone's throw of Police Headquarters without the knowledge of these officials.

"The only reason for such a condition of affairs," the Justice continued, "is that persons on the police force refrained from looking so that they might not see that the law was being violated; or else, knowing that the law was being violated, refrained from the discharge of their public duty to prosecute and bring these men to the bar of justice.

"I have requested the Prosecutor of the Pleas to prepare indictments such as I think ought to be presented by you which are to be laid before you, subject to your judgment and upon your responsibility. I shall be here two weeks from to-day and shall then expect that every one of these indictments be returned into this Court of Oyer and Terminer, either indorsed as true bills or else indorsed as bills not found to be true, and what the nature of that indorsement shall be, you are to determine on your consciences and by your judgment under oaths, and on your honor. Indorsement upon those bills, or any of them, shall be a true bill, or not found to be a true bill.

"Under the old English law they had a Latin word, 'ignoramus,' meaning that the Grand Jury did not find this to be a true bill. That word is both a noun and a verb in Latin, and take care, gentlemen, that it be not truly applied to any one of you as a noun. As a verb it means 'We do not know'; as a noun you know what it means in Latin and in English, too, but do not let it be applied to any one of you justly."

Justice Dixon also told the Grand Jurors that it was their duty to indict the officers of the Clinton Joint Stone Company of New York for the reckless blasting at Weehawken which had destroyed part of the Hudson Boulevard, but that, the foreman of the Grand Jury informed him, had already been done.

MRS. ROGERS'S APPEAL FAILS.

Vermont Court Decides Against Murderess—Will Appeal to Supreme Court.

MONTPELIER, Vt., May 27.—New trial was denied for Mrs. Mary M. Rogers, convicted murderess of her husband, Marcus Rogers of Bennington, in a decision handed down to-day by the Vermont Supreme Court. Two Justices dissented.

Counsel for Mrs. Rogers announced their intention of carrying the case to the United States Supreme Court. A writ of error will be presented to the State Supreme Court for the indorsement of the Chief Justice and the Clerk, and then will be filed with the Clerk of the United States Supreme Court. The indorsement of the writ of error by the Chief Justice of the Vermont Supreme Court will act as a stay of execution from June 2, when the reprieve ends.

Mrs. Rogers was convicted of chloroforming her husband while pretending to embrace him. Leon Perham is serving a life term in prison as her accomplice.

ROCKHILL AT CHE-FOO.

Stories of Chinese Boycott Due to Misinformation, He Says.

CHE-FOO, May 27.—W. W. Rockhill, who has succeeded Mr. Conger as American Minister at Peking, arrived here to-day on board the cruiser Baltimore, accompanied by his family, en route to Taku, and will resume his journey at daylight.

Minister Rockhill said he was informed, in a conference with Chinese at Shanghai, that stories to the effect that the Chinese were contemplating a boycott on American goods as a retaliation for contemplated legislation against Chinese immigration were the result of a misunderstanding.

SUICIDE FROM DESPAIR.

Tailor Levy Thought Himself a Failure, So He Passed Out.

Abraham Levy of 643 Newark Avenue, Jersey City, killed himself last night at the home of his brother-in-law, Bernard Burger of 1,901 Lexington Avenue, because from a prosperous master tailor he had become a journeyman out of work.

He had a prosperous tailoring establishment in Jersey City not long ago, and was plannnig to get married. Then he encountered several bad debts at the time notes were due, and had to give up his business and start out as a journeyman. He found work hard to get.

His brother-in-law invited him to make his home with him until he could get steady employment. Levy spent most of the money he could earn at odd tailoring jobs in car fares as he went hunting for work, but he seemed a failure.

Last night Burger and his wife went to dinner at a restaurant. They invited Levy to go with them, but he complained of a headache and said he would lie down. They returned to find him dying in the bath-room with a pistol wound in the temple.

Go to Prison for Defrauding Hawaii.

HONOLULU, May 27.—The Supreme Court to-day affirmed the verdict in the case of ex-Representative Jonah Rumalae and Lawyer Enoch Johnson, who were convicted of conspiracy to defraud the Territory during the session of the last Legislature. They drew up false vouchers for $252, which Rumalae approved and cashed. Each was sentenced to one year's imprisonment at hard labor.

REVEALS HIS CURE FOR CONSUMPTION

100 CASES, 1 DEATH, 25 CURES

The Process of Mixing the Oils Is Not Patented and Will Be Revealed to Proper Inquirers.

Dr. Oscar M. Leiser, who announced in the latter part of last year that he had discovered a cure for consumption, said yesterday that eight months' use of his remedy, which is administered by inhalation, had increased his confidence in it. At the same time, the doctor revealed the ingredients of the remedy. It is a combination of oils, and the ingredients are these: Oil of gaultheria, oil of thyme, oil of eucalyptus, pine needle oil, and hydrocarbon oils. The oils are prepared by a process discovered by C. B. Benson, a chemist, who has made the cure of consumption a lifelong study, but there is nothing secret about the process, and Dr. Leiser says it will be made known to anybody who can show a legitimate reason for wanting to learn what it is.

It was Dr. Benson who brought the remedy to the attention of Dr. Leiser. For eight months the latter has now been using it on sufferers from phthisis on the lower east side. The results he says have been "gratifying."

"We have treated about one hundred sufferers from the disease, since we began," Dr. Leiser said. "Of the patients only one has died; the tuberculosis germs have entirely disappeared from about twenty-five; about forty have been able to resume their several occupations; some ten or twelve gave up the treatment because they feared either that money would be asked of them or because they were indifferent. We have relieved the remainder to such an extent as to give us great hope. For example, we have checked the night sweats which are so distressing and weakening.

"Mark you, I am not so foolish as to claim that we can cure every case of consumption. But I must say that our experiments thus far have certainly had splendid results.

"Since our cure was announced a good deal has been said about the futility of any remedy for consumption by inhalation. Before I say anything further on this point I feel constrained to call your attention to the fact that many of the great well-known remedies, now universally used, met at first with great opposition in the profession. I need only refer to inoculation for the prevention of smallpox and the use of anti-toxin for dyphtheria, to illustrate what I mean.

"But we have been indirectly criticised on the ground that inhalation could not reach all the recesses of the lungs. The contention of our opponents is that the vapor cannot get below the trachea and that therefore the diseased portions of the lungs cannot be reached.

"Now, autopsies frequently reveal that the lungs of a man who has worked amid coal are filled with coal dust or that the lungs of a man who has worked in a brick yard are filled with particles of brick. This is so common that we often pick the particles out of the lungs. There is, in fact, a kind of a consumption caused by the excessive inhalation of dust.

"Now, how can a vapor fail to get into the lungs, when dust does get into them? That is the question we are asking. We believe that the vapor does get into the lungs; in fact, we are sure of it.

"The method of inhalation employed is by means of two small glass vessels which are filled with a mixture of the oil. By applying a pump, much like a bicycle pump, the vapor is diffused in the nostrils of a patient with the aid of a cone or face mask. It is very much like administering ether. If the patient is not too weak he can work the pump himself. If he is very weak some one has to do the pumping for him.

"The inhalation method has another advantage. It does not preclude the use of remedies to be taken into the stomach. But the great danger in treating consumption in this way is that the stomach is ruined by the use of the medicines and the patient is thus weakened, which is most necessary to avoid. Remedies like emulsions, however, can easily be taken in addition to my remedy, and you can see that the patient, if he can be cured at all, stands a pretty good chance.

"Besides curing the night sweats, which is no unimportant achievement, we have been able also to remove the little red spots which you see so often on the faces of consumptives, especially in the case of women sufferers from the disease.

"Quite a number of my professional friends are using our remedy. They are more successful with it than I am. The reason for this, I think, is that their patients are more advantageously situated as to light and air than are mine. As I told you I have been trying the remedy on the lower east side, where consumption is most prevalent. Down there the air and light in which the unfortunates live is very bad. The few of my private patients who have tried it have been benefited to a remarkable degree."

Dr. Leiser allowed it to be inferred that he would make known further results of his treatment of tuberculosis from time to time.

"FATHER WINTERS" IN JAIL.

NEWARK, N. J., May 27.—The police arrested to-day a middle-aged man, who said he was "the Rev. Father Winters," on a charge of false pretenses. The man says he is the director of the "Protectory for Girls of the State of New Jersey," which has temporary headquarters at 73 Leslie Street. Acting Captain Vogel declares that the priest has been collecting money in all sections of the city.

When arrested Winters protested his innocence, but would say nothing about himself further than that he was a priest and the director of the home.

At 73 Leslie Street an elderly woman said that detectives had been there and searched the house, but they "had made a grave mistake." The woman refused to divulge the name of the institution, nor would she say what the Director's name was.

"Father Winters," or "the Rev. Dr. Winters," as he variously styles himself, came into notice in Newark about two years ago. He promoted an organization called the National Bureau for the Americanization of Aliens, and induced the late John Whitehead to serve as President.

In the by-laws printed by the association is a foot note which reads:

"The Rev. Dr. Winters, general director, has volunteered his services for the first year without salary."

When the police were prompted to investigate the man's doings and the so-called institution, Mr. Whitehead could not tell much about the "Rev. Dr. Winters"—not even his first name.

ANGRY AT DEPORTATION.

Canadians Object to Action Against Pere Marquette Employes.

WINDSOR, Ontario, May 27.—The action of the Dominion Government in ordering the immediate deportation of Père Marquette Railway officials from St. Thomas has aroused a storm of indignation and dismay along this border.

Three thousand persons cross the Detroit River daily from Windsor, Walkerville, and Sandwich, and should the American authorities seek to adopt retaliatory measures and discriminate against Canadian employes, incalculable hardship will result. In Windsor alone there are over 500 families, some members of which are employed in Detroit during the day and return home at night.

The whole agitation has done much already to prejudice American employers against Canadian labor along the border, and predictions are not wanting that unless the Dominion Government can be induced to rescind the order of deportation great harm wil surely result.

ST. THOMAS, Ontario, May 27.—The Americans ordered for deportation say they have been instructed not to leave until escorted to the border. They will take the case to the privy council of England if necessary, they say.

The City Council has passed a resolution memorializing the Dominion Government to withdraw the order. Petitions are being circulated and largely signed to the same effect.

THREAT FOR PREACHERS.

St. Louis Police Say C. W. Burns Confessed to Blackmail.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, May 27.—Charles W. Burns, alias John Roberts, aged forty-nine, who was arrested last night charged by the Rev. F. W. Simpson with using the mails to defraud, confessed to-day, Post Office Inspector Sullivan and United States District Attorney Dyer say, to having attempted to blackmail not only Mr. Simpson, but about a dozen other clergymen.

United States Commissioner Gray today held Burns in $1,000 bond. Being unable to give bond, he was locked up. Three weeks ago Burns opened a confectionery store at 2190 Easton Avenue. Soon afterward preachers began receiving letters signed "John Roberts." Each demanded $50, saying: "You may not think people are onto you, but I am. If you do not send me $50 at once, so I can get out of town, I will tell what I know." The preacher was told to send the money to the Easton Avenue address, whence it would be forwarded by the writer's friend, C. W. Burns.

No Insurance Inquiry Plan.

ALBANY, May 27.—Gov. Higgins to-day denied the New York report that he would recommend an investigation of insurance companies in the call for an extra session. "There is absolutely no foundation for such a statement, said he. "I am not going to New York Tuesday and I have reached no such conclusion relative to the extra session."

Increase of Capital Stock.

THE SWEDISH-NORWEGIAN UNION IS THREATENED

King Oscar Vetoes the Separate Consular Bill.

CABINET AT ONCE RESIGNS

Ministers Tell the King His Action Means Dissolution of Union—Excitement in Christiania.

CHRISTIANIA, May 27.—King Oscar at to-day's sitting of the Norwegian Council of Ministers at Stockholm declined to sign the bill creating a separate Consular system for Norway. The Ministers immediately tendered their resignations.

Each member of the Cabinet individually urged the King to sanction the Consular law. When they all had spoken King Oscar read a declaration indorsing the declaration made by the Crown Prince on April 3 that the matter could be solved only by mutual negotiations.

His majesty added that he could not give his assent to the law because the existing community of interests in the Consular service could not be abolished without mutual agreement. The existing arrangement, he said, was established by a resolution of the Mixed Council and could only be disturbed by the Mixed Council. His love for both peoples impelled him to withhold his sanction.

The members of the Cabinet urgently protested that his Majesty's declaration was not only the rejection of a pressing demand by the whole of the Norwegian people, but, drawn up as it was in disregard of the Cabinet's unanimous advice and without the advice of any Norwegian, it was a breach of the Constitution and a violation of the Constitutional rights, independence, and sovereignty of Norway, and would mean dissolution of the union. No member of the Norwegian Government, the Ministers said, could countersign such a decision without from that moment losing his fatherland.

The members of the Cabinet having presented their resignations, King Oscar read his reply, declaring that he could not accept them, as it was clear that no other Cabinet could be formed at the present time.

The Ministers, however, declined to withdraw their resignations. They had beforehand appealed to the King to defer action on the matter until it could be dealt with in the full council at Christiania, but the King had announced his inability to acquiesce.

No protocol of the proceedings was drawn up, as the Ministers all refused to countersign one, and the King's veto of the law is therefore constitutionally non-existent.

King Oscar's veto has created a great sensation, as possibly involving the dissolution of the union between Sweden and Norway and perhaps even international complications, though the best-informed Norwegians decline to believe that there is any danger of a Russian invasion, contending that if Russia had designs, which they do not believe she has, she would not be deterred in pressing them by having to fight both Sweden and Norway.

The Norwegian newspapers, commenting on the situation, declare that the King's decision shows that Norway no longer has a sovereign willing to follow the country's advice, but that this fact will draw the Norwegian people yet closer together in strength and unanimity.

A great crowd gathered at the Government offices this afternoon for a demonstration in honor of Premier Michelsen. The Premier tried to avoid this by leaving the building by a back door, but the crowd discovered and cheered him with increased enthusiasm.

Premier Michelsen has requested the Students' Association to refrain from organizing a popular procession.

NORWAY SAID TO BE ARMING.

Sven Hedin Declares Union Worth Not a Drop of Swedish Blood.

It has recently been rumored that great secret preparations are going on at points on the frontier of Norway in expectation of a break with Sweden. The extremists among the Norwegians have been threatening, should the King refuse to agree to the Norwegian demands, of which the establishment of a separate Consular system is only the first, to begin forcible measures to secure the independence of the country.

It has been asserted that if she decides on separation Norway will choose to be a monarchy in preference to a republic, and that she will probably invite Prince Waldemar, youngest son of the King of Denmark, to become her King.

Dr. Nansen for Norway and Dr. Sven Hedin for Sweden have been engaged in an acrimonious correspondence on the separation question in the columns of The London Times. That newspaper pointed out the danger of invasion by other countries that would threaten Norway should she declare her independence, and also asserted that danger to Norway meant danger to Sweden. This led to a letter from Dr. Hedin, in which he declared that "not a single Swede esteems the present union worth one drop of Swedish blood." He also said:

"If Norway chooses of her own free will to rupture the Union, Sweden cannot be held responsible for the dangers to which she thereby exposes herself, and if those dangers prove also an indirect menace to Sweden, then we must for the future, and in obedience to the primary law of self-preservation, study exclusively our own protection, no matter how painful it might be to us to see Norway in the grasp of the despoiler's hand. In this matter there is no room whatever for sentimental considerations.

"Since 1814 Norway has been united with Sweden, but previously to that she was for centuries a dependency upon Denmark. Except for the dependency upon Denmark, that is the situation to which we shall return in the event of a breach of the Union.

"We want our blood and our treasure to defend the ancient soil of Sweden; we cannot afford to sacrifice our army and our fleet for the defense of, say, Finmark, which a Norwegian politician recently described as a God-forsaken sort of place. (afkrok.) Without help Norway cannot effectually defend that, her extreme northerly province. Her permanent land defenses are in the south, along the Glommen, and have been constructed against Sweden.

"The transport of troops to the far north is rendered difficult by the fact that there exist no railways, and what Norway's means of transport by sea amount to can fairly easily be calculated. Suppose, now, that Finmark were to be attacked by land and that Swedish territory were not violated, it is surely not a little thing to ask that Sweden should plunge into a disastrous war for the sake of preserving such a 'God-forsaken sort of place' to Norway, after Norway, in face of warnings from Sweden, has broken adrift from the Union, which we have always looked upon as a safeguard for us both, and especially for Norway, the partner in peril.

den's duty would be clear; it would be here to observe the strictest neutrality, for a hostile occupation of Finmark would not affect us so closely as that; in order to avoid it, we should bring upon ourselves a naval war in the Baltic, and expose our coasts to attack and to all the unhappy and desolating consequences of such a policy.

"The only occasion that we can conceive of as rendering possible a defensive alliance between us is the case of the two kingdoms being attacked simultaneously. But I would point out that since 1809 Sweden has lived on terms of good fellowship with Russia, and under no circumstances will she take steps that could be interpreted as unfriendly to that country, and least of all would she incur responsibilities which sooner or later might involve her in war with her neighbor on the east. We deplore the blind, separatist policy of Norway, but we cannot, we shall not, allow ourselves to be led astray on adventurous paths."

PARIS EN FETE FOR ALFONSO.

Queen Christina Wants M. Loubet to Keep an Eye on Her Son.

PARIS, May 27.—King Alfonso will arrive here next Tuesday for a six days' visit. Elaborate preparations for his entertainment are well advanced. The Place de l'Opéra and the boulevards will be lined by huge columns bearing the arms of Spain and of the City of Paris, with electrical devices on a scale of magnificence not seen since Emperor Nicholas's memorable visit to Paris.

An interesting phase of the Spanish King's visit is the deep concern of the Queen Mother over her son's welfare during his first journey abroad. President Loubet has received a letter from the ex-Queen Regent Christina indicating her wish that the President exercise a sort of fatherly aid in making the sojourn of the King becoming to his station.

The royal party will be quartered in the D'Orsay Palace. The programme includes for Tuesday a dinner at the Elysée Palace; on Wednesday visits to the Invalides and Panthéon and a gala performance at the Opera; on Thursday military manoeuvres at Chalons, during which King Alfonso, mounted and wearing the uniform of a Spanish officer, will inspect the troops; on Friday, visits to St. Cyr and Versailles and a floral festival in the Bois de Boulogne; on Saturday a military review at Vincennes, and on Sunday a grand steeplechase at Auteuil.

Later on Sunday his Majesty, accompanied by M. Loubet, will leave Paris for Cherbourg, where the following day there will be a brilliant naval review of the assembled Spanish, French, and British squadrons. In addition numerous dinners will serve to bring out expressions of the international significance attaching to King Alfonso's visit.

At an anti-military meeting here last night at which a number of Anarchists were present a resolution was passed calling on the populace to hoot King Alfonso during his visit to Paris. Disturbances occurred when the gathering was dispersed, and several arrests were made.

LONDON, May 27.—Elaborate arrangements are being made for the entertainment of the King of Spain, who will arrive here on June 5 and be quartered at Buckingham Palace.

A state dinner, a gala performance at the Opera, naval and military reviews, and a luncheon at the Mansion House are among the items on the programme.

King Alfonso will start on his return to Spain on June 10.

MADRID, May 27.—King Alfonso started on his foreign tour to-night amid remarkable demonstrations of loyalty and enthusiasm. The crowd of carriages and people was so dense in the vicinity of the railway station that it was impossible to move. The station was thronged with members of the Cabinet, diplomats, Cardinals, Generals, Admirals, officials, and grandees.

His Majesty briefly addressed the dignitaries and several times embraced the Queen Mother, who was visibly moved, and others of his relatives.

PRELATE BARS D'ANNUNZIO.

Makes Committee Withdraw Its Invitation to Author.

ROME, May 27.—An exhibition of ancient art was recently organized at Chieti, ninety-two miles from Rome, the Archbishop of Chieti being one of the chief exhibitors.

The Committee on Organization asked Gabriele D'Annunzio to deliver the inaugural address and he agreed to do so, but the Archbishop objected on the ground that D'Annunzio's works had been put on the Index Expurgatorius, adding that if D'Annunzio spoke he (the Archbishop) would withdraw from the exhibition.

The Committee eventually politely asked D'Annunzio to reconsider his determination to deliver the inaugural address.

PRINCESS LOUISE WINS.

Doctors Find Her Retention in an Asylum Unjustifiable.

PARIS, May 27.—The official report of the two French specialists who were appointed a court to decide the question of the mental condition of Princess Louise of Saxe-Coburg finds her confinement in an asylum totally unjustifiable.

Princess Louise, daughter of King Leopold of Belgium, eloped with an Austrian Lieutenant in 1895, and was subsequently placed under restraint.

She escaped to Paris, where she has since been living on an allowance made by her husband, Prince Philip of Saxe-Coburg.

FIRE ON THE MAJESTIC.

Starts While Vessel Is Lying at Liverpool—Cabins Damaged.

LIVERPOOL, May 27.—Fire of unknown origin started this morning in the second cabin section of the White Star liner Majestic, which arrived on Thursday from New York, while she was lying at her dock here.

Considerable damage was done to the cabins before the flames were extinguished.

Mr. Odell Goes to Paris.

BERLIN, May 27.—Ex-Gov. Odell of New York and Mrs. Odell left Berlin for Paris to-day. Thence they will go to London. The automobile in which they have been touring Southern Russia since February has been sent to England, and it is not likely that it will be used again on this side of the Atlantic, as the Odells are tired of it. Ambassador and Mrs. Tower gave a luncheon in their honor on Thursday.

Braun to Investigate in Russia.

VIENNA, May 27.—United States Special Immigration Inspector Marcus Braun will start for St. Petersburg to-morrow, by way of Berlin, to investigate emigration conditions in Russia.

British Ambassador Returns.

Sir Henry Mortimer Durand, British Ambassador to the United States, who went to England on April 26, arrived in New York on the Cunarder Campania yesterday morning. The Ambassador was accompanied by his son, Capt. H. M. [illegible]

BANK FORGERY RAPS STRICT BUSINESS MEN

ARE DIRECTED BY CAPITALISTS

Important Functions of the Middleman or Forger's Agent—Attempts to Rob the Band Punished.

In a paper read before the Convention of International Police Chiefs, held during the week in Washington, William A. Pinkerton read a paper in which he imparted some interesting information concerning forgery and forgers.

"A professional forgery band," he said, "consists of, first, a capitalist or backer; second, the actual forger, known among his associates as the 'scratcher'; third, the man who acts as confidential agent for the forger, known as the 'middleman'; fourth, the man who presents the forged paper at the bank for payment, and known as the 'layer-down' or 'presenter.'

"When necessary to have a capitalist or backer connected with a band, he furnishes the funds for the organization, frequently lays out the plans of work, and obtains the genuine paper from which forgeries are made. He will, when necessary, find the engraver, the lithographer, and, most important of all, the 'professional' forger, who will do the actual forgery work.

"The professional forger has, as a rule, considerable knowledge of chemicals, which enables him to alter checks, drafts, bills of exchange, letters of credit, or to change the names on registered bonds. He is something of an artist, too, for with a fine camel's-hair brush he can restore the most delicate tints in bank safety paper, where the tints have been destroyed by the use of acids; in fact, no bank safety paper is a protection against him.

PERFORATIONS REPLACED.

"In the case of the amount of a genuine draft or check being perforated in the paper, certain professional forgers have reached such perfection in their work that they are able to cut out the perforation, put in a patch something the same as a shoemaker does with a shoe, and then skillfully color the 'patch' to agree with the original, so that it becomes a very difficult matter to detect the alterations even with the use of the microscope. This done and the writing cleaned off the face of the draft, check, letter of credit, or bill of exchange, with only the genuine signature left and the tints on the paper restored, the forger is prepared to fill up the paper for any amount decided upon.

"The backer or capitalist is rarely known to any member of the band outside of the go-between, whom he makes use of to find the forger. He very rarely allows himself to become known to the men who present the forged paper at the banks. If the forgery scheme is successful, the backer receives back the money paid out for the preparation of the work, as well as any amount he may have loaned the band to enable them to open accounts at banks where they propose placing the forged paper. He also gets a certain percentage of all successful forgeries, this percentage running from 20 to 30 per cent., but where the backer and forger are working together, their joint percentage is never less than 50 per cent.

"The duties of the middleman or go-between are to receive from the forger or his confidential agent the altered or forged paper. He finds the man to present the same, accompanies his confederates on their forgery trips throughout the country, acts as the agent of the backer in dealing out money for expenses, sees that their plan of operations is carried out, and, in fact, becomes the general manager of the band.

"The middleman is usually selected for his firmness of character. He must be a man known among criminals as a stanch man; one who cannot be easily frightened by detectives when arrested, no matter what pressure may be brought to bear upon him. He must have such acquaintanceship among criminals as will enable him to select other men who are stanch and who are not likely to talk and tell their business, whether sober or under the influence of liquor. He must also have at least one record of conviction standing against him. This is for the additional protection of the backer and forger, as they know that in law the testimony of an accomplice who is also an ex-convict, should he conclude to become State's witness, would have to be strongly corroborated before a court or jury in order to be believed.

WORK OF THE PRESENTERS.

"As the capitalist and forger, for self-protection, use great care in selecting a middleman, the middleman to protect himself also uses the same care in the selection of men to present the forged paper. The presenters are of all ages and appearances, from the party who will pass as an errand boy, messenger, porter, or clerk to the prosperous business man, horse trader, stock buyer, or farmer.

"When a presenter enters a bank to lay down a forged paper, the go-between will sometimes enter the bank with him, and stand outside the counter, noting carefully if there is any suspicious action on the part of the paying teller when the forged paper is presented to him; and whether the presenter carries himself properly and does his part well.

"But usually the middleman prefers waiting outside the bank for the presenter, possibly watching him through a window from the street. If the presenter is successful and gets the money on the forged paper, the middleman will follow him when he leaves the bank to some convenient spot where, without attracting attention, he receives the money. He then gives the presenter another piece of forged paper drawn on some other bank in the immediate neighborhood, accompanying him also to this bank, and so they go from bank to bank, usually victimizing from three to five banks in each city, their work being completed generally in less than an hour's time. All money obtained from the various banks on the forged paper is immediately turned over to the middleman, who furnishes all the money for current expenses, and pays the percentage of the money obtained by the forged paper.

"When a middleman is exceedingly cautious and not entirely satisfied with the presenters, he will sometimes have an assistant. This is where the shadow comes in. This shadow will, under the directions of the middleman, follow the presenter into the bank and report fully of his actions. He sometimes catches the presenter in an attempt to swindle his companions by claiming that he did not get the money, but had to get out of the bank in a hurry and leave the check or drafts, as the paying teller was suspicious.

"A presenter caught at this trick is sometimes sent into a bank to present a forged check where the bank has been previously warned of his coming by an anonymous letter, written by or at the instigation of one of the leaders. This is done as a punishment for his dishonesty and as a warning to the other presenters not to attempt this treachery. Usually, however, a dishonest member is quietly dropped."

Squadron A Goes Into Camp.

In heavy marching order 200 members of Squadron A left their armory at Ninety-fourth Street and Madison Avenue yesterday morning at 11 o'clock and to the stirring strains of "There'll Be A Hot Time in the Old Town To-night," took up their march to Van Cortlandt Park, where they will remain in camp for three days. Major Sloper Sherman was in command. The men looked well

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, May 27.—German business men trading with China are following with the keenest interest the differences between China and the United States.

Germany is now negotiating a new commercial treaty with the Peking Government.

FETES AT SCHWERIN BEGIN.

German Crown Prince Arrives at the Home of His Fiancee.

SCHWERIN, Mecklenburg-Schwerin, May 27.—The series of balls, dinners, and receptions which are to precede the wedding of Crown Prince Frederick William to the Duchess Cecilia of Mecklenburg-Schwerin began to-day.

The Crown Prince arrived here last night and was received at the railroad station by the Duchess Cecilia, her brother, the Grand Duke Frederick, and other members of her family. A Court ball was given to-night; there will be a state dinner to-morrow, and a ceremonial breakfast on Monday.

During the following three days the young Duchess will rest, as the preparations for the wedding have been most fatiguing. About fifty costumes have been fitted and refitted on her in the last six weeks, which has meant standing for hours every day.

Recently the Duchess has also been obliged to give daily sittings to a portrait painter.

Deitrich was suspended because he criticised members of the Faculty in a paper to be read on class day.

ASK PRESIDENT'S AID.

Live Stock Interests Want Larger Export Market for Meats.

WASHINGTON, May 27.—For the purpose of enlisting the sympathies of President Roosevelt in a larger export market for American meats, F. J. Hagenbarth of Salt Lake City, Utah, President of the National Live Stock Association, called at the White House to-day.

So great was the President's interest that he promised to deal with the subject in his annual message to Congress, and will take up a number of other matters of vital importance to live stock men.

"We have lost many millions of dollars annually for the last three or four years in export markets for meats alone through commercial misunderstandings that have resulted in tariff retaliation against meat from this country," said Mr. Hagenbarth to the President. "Germany's discrimination has been the most severe, although the loss of the French market has cost live stock interests $40,000,000 annually."

The President asked him what he proposed as a solution.

"Reciprocity preferably, and if we can't get that, retaliation," replied Mr. Hagenbarth.

The President agreed as to the remedy, although he thought that reciprocity and retaliation could both be adopted by the United States.

STATE CENSUS OF CITY WILL START ON JUNE 1

Canvass of the Five Boroughs Will Last Two Weeks.

ENUMERATORS TO BE POLITE

But Will Call the Police for Rude Citizens—Insulting Officials May Be Reported by 'Phone.

Whether New York has in her five boroughs a population of 4,000,000 will be known after a two weeks' canvass of the State census officials, which begins on June 1. On Thursday morning 900 enumerators will start out ringing doorbells all over Manhattan and the Bronx, and almost as many will go to work in the other boroughs. The men are instructed to be polite to citizens, unless the citizens see fit to be rude to them, when they will have the right, under act of the Legislature, to call in the police.

There are two supervisors of the State census for Manhattan and the Bronx and twelve assistants scattered over the city. There is one supervisor for each election district and special men for institutions, public and private. Of these the man who got the Tombs, where the keeper knows the exact number of his guests, is regarded as the fellow who grabbed off the fattest job.

The Inspectors have been informed that they are not to call on the police for assistance until after they communicate with the Assistant Supervisor assigned to each district. The hope of the census officials is that they will have no trouble with the public. No impudent questions are to be asked, except the ages of citizens. The questions to be asked are the name of each person in a house, his or her usual abode; the relationship of each person to the head of the family; color, sex, and age at last birthday; nativity, time of acquiring citizenship, and occupation, trade, or profession. Inmates of institutions must give their residence previous to their admittance or commitment.

The enumerators will receive $2 a day and 1 cent for each person registered. Thomas E. Brown, Jr., Census Supervisor for New York County, announced yesterday at the offices of the bureau, 150 Nassau Street, that he hoped offensive enumerators would be reported. The act, with its appropriation of $300,000 for the census, provides that the enumerators may not solicit advertising, insurance, orders for books, or merchandise. Citizens are asked to make their complaints by calling up the telephone number 6227 John.

Seventeen expert interpreters versed in many languages and dialects will be put to work as enumerators. Oddly enough, there is an expert in Gaelic, a distinct gain for those who are trying to revive the ancient language of the Irish. It is not supposed that there are any great number from the Emerald Isle who cannot speak English, but the Gaelic expert has been employed in the event of emergencies. There will be Japanese, Chinese, Russian, Dutch, German, French, Arabic, Turkish, Assyrian, Bohemian, Armenian, Hungarian, and Syrian interpreters, and it is expected that they will be kept busy.

One of the queer rules of a census canvass is that if you die on June 1, even if the enumerator calls a week later, you are to be counted, but if you are born on June 2 you will not be counted until ten years from now, when under the Constitution of New York it will be your turn.

That swindlers may not be able to represent themselves as enumerators, every official enumerator will be armed with the following greeting of authority, bearing the seal of the State:

STATE OF NEW YORK.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

Know ye, That by the authority vested in me by Chapter 83, as amended by Chapter 144, of the Laws of 1905, entitled "An act to provide for an enumeration of the inhabitants of this State," approved March 21, 1905, and reposing full confidence in the ability, discretion and integrity of

of the of County of

I do hereby appoint him an enumerator for

And I do authorize and empower him to execute and fulfill the duties of enumerator in accordance with law and such instructions and regulations as may be given him under my direction. This appointment shall terminate, unless sooner revoked, on the completion of the duty for which it is made.

Given under my hand at the Capitol, in the City of Albany, on this day of A. D. 1905.

(Signed) JOHN F. O'BRIEN,
Secretary of State.

W. C. Hunt, one of the chief experts of the United States Census Bureau, has been loaned to New York for its census.

Bruce, Attorney General Mayer, Senator Depew, and Senator Platt will attend.

GRANT HOMESTEAD TO GO.

Old Residence of General's Mother Is Being Demolished.

Among the buildings the demolition of which has been begun to make way for the new Court House building on Jersey City Heights is the old-fashioned frame mansion in which Gen. Grant's mother and his sisters, Mrs. Cramer and Mrs. Corbin, lived for many years. Mrs. Grant died there in 1884. The house stands on a lawn that once covered all the corner, for half a block on both streets, at Baldwin and Pavonia Avenues.

Gen. Grant was wont to ride every Sunday morning to the old homestead to visit his mother and sisters. At that time he was one of the firm of Grant & Ward.

The new Court House is to replace the ancient temple of justice that has stood for half a century or more on the lots adjoining Mrs. Grant's old home to the west. It will cover almost the entire block between Grove and Baldwin Streets and from Erie to Ay[illegible] Streets, on Jersey City Heights. The county will spend about $1,250,000 on the new building.

TAKE STRIKE CONTROL OUT OF SHEA'S HANDS

Executive Board of Teamsters Assumes Management.

HOPE FOR PEACE, THEY SAY

Chicago Labor Federation Head Declares Danger Point Has Been Reached—Women in Riots.

CHICAGO, May 27.—The General Executive Board of the Teamsters' Union has taken the management of the strike out of the hands of President Shea, and it will be managed hereafter by the members of the Executive Board and the local Strike Committee. The Executive Board issued a statement as follows:

"At the meeting of the General Executive Board of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters a general discussion of the present strike was had, and it was decided unanimously to continue the struggle along the same lines, with frequent conferences between the General Executive Board and the local joint Strike Committee of the Teamsters' Joint Council of Chicago.

"If at any time any change of policy is decided upon it will be at once announced. We believe the strike should be confined to Chicago, and to as few men in Chicago as is possible.

"We are opposed to spreading the strike to any workmen except teamsters.

"The General Executive Board is hopeful that peace will soon be established, but any peace must be on terms honorable to the strikers. However, there is no intention on the part of the Executive Board or the Joint Strike Committee to be arbitrary."

"Organized labor has reached the danger point in this strike. I do not mean that the strike must be called off, but that for the sake of the unions, as well as for the sake of the business interests of Chicago, it should come to an end," said Charles Dold, President of the Chicago Federation of Labor, to-day.

Numerous fights between policemen and strike sympathizers occurred during the day, most of them in the lumber yards. At Western Avenue and West Twenty-sixth Street a large number of women and children took part in an attack on a non-union driver, and made trouble by getting in front of the officers when the policemen charged on the men rioters. Mrs. Anna Corcoran was arrested as she stood with an armful of bricks, hurling them at the police.

At Market and Randolph Streets, in the heart of the wholesale district, street car men attempted to smash a wagon by jamming it between cars. The police had great difficulty in opening a path for the wagon. J. J. Doherty, a motorman, caught the hand of Policeman Alcock in his teeth and lacerated it. Alcock clubbed the motorman into submission.

By night twelve strikers had been arrested charged with assault. Police Inspector Lavin to-day arrested Nicholas Reichart, James Collins, John H. Doherty, and "Shoulders" Wahl on the charge of conspiring to slug H. F. Jones, barn steward of the Wells-Fargo Express Company, and W. E. Ellis, Superintendent of the City Delivery Department of the same company. Reichart, the police say, confessed his share in the case, and his statements led to the arrest of the others.

Several new efforts were made during the day to settle the strike, but none amounted to anything. Levy Mayer, attorney for the Employers' Association, and James B. Barry, business agent of the Express Drivers' Union, both left for the East. Neither would state the object of his journey.

George Mellor, President of the Carriage and Wagon Workers' Union, who has been sought for two weeks by the police in connection with the murder of Gus Carlstrom, who was beaten to death by "sluggers," was arrested to-day. Other officials of the union admitted that Carlstrom was beaten by men hired by them for the purpose, and Mellor acknowledged the truth of their statement, declaring, however, that he had no direct transactions with the men.

BLINDED BY SEARCHLIGHTS.

Potomac Boatmen Complain of Practice for War Game.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 27.—The War Department is receiving a novel complaint from vessel owners on the Potomac. Tug owners and steamboat Captains say that they are being watched so closely by the searchlights of the coast artillery posts that they are seriously inconvenienced in navigating the river.

The artillerymen are coaching up for the manoeuvres to occur in June and spend the night watching every craft that goes up or down the river. The big searchlights blind the pilots. One man, it is said, has been permanently blinded. The master of a vessel who turns his light into a pilot house is liable to have his license revoked. The War Department authorities will put a stop to the abuse.

ONE "NOT" SPOILS RATE BILL.

Wisconsin Legislature Must Repass Measure to Make It Effective.

MADISON, Wis., May 27.—The omission of the little word "not" in the engrossed copy of a bill passed by the State Senate creating a commission to control and supervise railway rates makes the commission practically powerless.

The new law was intended to read that "they (the orders of the commission making rates) shall not be declared inoperative, illegal or void for any omission of a technical nature in respect thereto." The bill, as actually passed by the Senate, provides that the commission's rulings "shall be declared inoperative, &c., for any omission of a technical nature in respect thereto." Re-passage will be attempted.

Baragwanath, pastor of Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church of this city, has been invited to the pastorate of Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, New York, made vacant by the transfer of the Rev. Dr. E. The Rev. W. F. Compton, pastor of Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church, Kingston, has been invited to Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church, Newburg.

Five Hurt in Fall from Scaffold.

ALTOONA, Penn., May 27.—Five men were badly injured by the breaking of a scaffolding near the roof of the new insane asylum to-day. Two of the men are not likely to recover. The workmen were hoisting an eight-foot stone from the third floor to the roof of the Administration building, when the planks broke at a point just over the skyway.

Bruise on Finger Killed Him.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, N. J., May 27.—Charles H. Butterfield, fifty-six years old, a grocer, of 182 Badger Avenue, died at his home to-day from blood poisoning, the result of a bruise on the little finger of his left hand, received a few days ago. Mr. Butterfield did not know how he received the injury.

FALLS DOWN SUBWAY STEPS.

Man Who Said He Was Henry Warandorf, a Florist, Likely to Die.

A man who told the police he was Henry Warandorf, a florist of 108 Knickerbocker Avenue, Brooklyn, fell down the Subway steps on the downtown side of the station at Twenty-eighth Street and Fourth Avenue late last night. He received a fractured skull and was taken to Bellevue Hospital in a critical condition. The doctors have little hope of his recovery.

Herman Warandorf, the New York florist, whose name is similar, lives in Manhattan. At his residence and the homes of his sons, no information could be obtained last night. The injured man was about sixty years old.

THREE FIRE HORSES BOLT.

Two Trained Animals Follow New Arrival's Lead.

Three fire horses broke away from the house of Engine Company No. 124, in Hicks Street, near Joralemon Street, Brooklyn, shortly after 11 o'clock last night, and after an exciting chase through the residential section of Brooklyn were recaptured. No one was injured, but the galloping horses caused alarm along the route of the chase.

Engine Company No. 124 recently got a new and heavier machine, which required a third horse. The animal bought was unused to the routine of the firehouse. An alarm came in at about 11 o'clock from Myrtle Avenue and Ryerson Street. As a second alarm, which would call out Engine No. 124 was expected, the three horses were brought out ready to start. While waiting the green horse broke through the rope across the front door of the engine house, and, followed by the two trained animals, dashed along Hicks Street and through the residential section of Brooklyn Heights to Cranberry Street. Then the runaways bolted along Cranberry to Fulton, thence to High Street, Pearl, and Nassau, and along Nassau to Jay Street, where the untrained horse was captured by a man who gave his name as James Collins. The moment the untrained horse was captured the regular fire horses came to a standstill and were taken back to the engine house by the firemen, who with a number of policemen had pursued.

FATALLY HURT ON ELEVATED.

A man who is so far unidentified, either fell or jumped from the Third Avenue elevated railroad station at One Hundred and Forty-third Street shortly before one o'clock this morning. His body was caught between the station platform and a northbound train and badly mangled before the train could be stopped. He was still alive when lifted to the platform and removed to the Lincoln Hospital.

The doctors said there was no chance of his recovery, as he had been injured internally, in addition to having both legs crushed. The train tore off his clothing, and even his shoes. He was about thirty-five or forty years old, wore dark clothing and a soft felt hat.

No one of the railroad employes had noticed him until they saw him topple from the station platform to the rails in front of the approaching train.

FELL FROM CLIFF TO RIVER.

Boatman Rescued Unconscious Boy from the Hudson.

Special to The New York Times.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., May 27.—Two adventurous boys, William and Frank Wirsch, aged respectively nine and ten years, started early this evening to scale the precipitous face of Kaal Rock, the picturesque headland which is familiar to all travelers on the Hudson and which shadows the steamboat landing at this city. When they were forty feet up William lost his hold and fell to a strip of beach, from which he rolled unconscious into the river.

James Ellis, a boatman, happened to be in the vicinity, and rescued the boy and took him home to his mother. Frank was so frightened by his brother's experience that he came near losing his hold, but was finally saved unhurt. The doctors think they may be able to save William's life, but it is feared that he is injured internally.

SUMMER HOTEL BURNED.

Stratford-by-the-Sea at Point Pleasant Entirely Destroyed.

Special to The New York Times.

POINT PLEASANT, N. J., May 27.—The Stratford-by-the-Sea, one of the large Summer hotels on the beach, was entirely destroyed by fire this morning. It was built about fifteen years ago, and is owned by Miss Anna Travers. It was managed by her mother, Mrs. Sophia V. O'Brien, and was being put in readiness for the season.

The fire was discovered burning through the roof about 9 o'clock, and in spite of the efforts of the Fire Department with the chemical engine the whole building was burned. When the Manasquan department arrived at about 10 o'clock it gave its attention immediately to the Summer cottages near by. All were saved.

No one was living in the building, but servants had been working there yesterday, and there had been a fire in the furnace in the afternoon. Much of the furniture was saved. The hotel was not insured for its full value.

SALOONKEEPER STABBED.

Wou'dn't Take a Bad Quarter, So Got a Knife Wound.

Herman Kreyer of 769 First Avenue, partner in a saloon at 73 Eighth Avenue, was stabbed early this morning in his saloon and will probably die of his wound. His partner shouted for the police, and Kreyer was taken to St. Vincent's Hospital.

Kreyer was about to close up, when a young man came into the saloon and asked for a glass of beer. In lieu of payment he placed a counterfeit quarter on the counter. Kreyer refused it. The man went out, but soon returned, and, seeing Kreyer standing by the bar, drew a long knife and stabbed him.

The assailant escaped.

RECREATION PIERS OPEN.

Bands Playing, Crowds Waiting, and Everybody Glad.

The recreation piers on the North and East Rivers were opened for the season yesterday afternoon. Crowds were waiting, and the roomy piers, decorated with flags and bunting, were thronged all afternoon by women and children. The bands played popular airs, and through the evening the strains of "Tammany" and "Good By, Little Girl" floated out upon the water.

Ship News by Wireless.

The De Forest Wireless Telegraph Company was in communication at 9 o'clock last night with the steamship Caracas, which sailed for Venezuela yesterday at 9 o'clock. The steamship was then eighty-four miles south of Scotland Lightship. At 7:30 P. M. the Horatio Hall, outward bound for Portland, Me., communicated with the company's station on Sandy Hook. She was then thirty-five miles out.

Derelicts in Liners' Track.

The Cunarder Campania, which arrived from Liverpool yesterday, passed the wreck of a dismasted schooner when about 250 miles east of Sandy Hook. La Lorraine, from Havre, passed a derelict floating awash, with bowsprit but no mainmast, about 130 miles east of the Hook in latitude 40.08, longitude 61.06 she passed

OUTLAW SHOT BY POSSE AFTER DESPERATE FIGHT

Latest Development in a Deadly North Carolina Feud.

FATAL DUEL NEAR CHURCH

Clay Grubb Won, Killing His Brother-in-Law, and Was Wounded from Ambush by Negro Just Captured.

Special to The New York Times.

SALISBURY, N. C., May 27.—Nat Crump, the negro outlaw, for whose capture dead or alive a reward of $750 had been offered, is lying at the point of death at Old Fort with two loads of shot in his body. Crump, who from ambush fired at and seriously wounded Clay Grubb here last Monday, was captured early this morning after a desperate fight with a Sheriff's posse.

The outlaw was hiding in a gorge known as Mudcut when surrounded by Sheriff Washburn and four deputies. He opened fire on his pursuers, but the shot went wild. Before he could fire again he was brought down with a load of shot from Deputy Lyttle's gun. He attempted to rise and continue the fight, but Deputy Porter sent a second load into his shoulder and put an end to further resistance.

The capture of Crump is the latest development in a deadly feud that has been waged in Davidson County between Clay Grubb, who was acquitted of murder here on May 20, and the family of Obe Davis, whom Grubb shot last Fall. Never before has there been such a private war to the death in North Carolina, and it is doubtful if Kentucky, famous for its feuds, has often seen the like of this one.

TWO SHOT FROM AMBUSH.

On the Monday following his acquittal, in the very heart of the "moonshiner" district, Grubb was waylaid while driving in a buggy with Clarence Thompson, and both of them were shot from ambush. Turning in the buggy when he heard the first shot, Grubb recognized Nat Crump, with whom he had before had trouble. Grubb and his companion managed to get away without being killed, though they were freely sprinkled with No. 2 shot, and immediately arranged to chase the negro down.

Obe Davis's relatives and their friends were reported to have set out on a search for the negro and the other ambushers to protect them from Grubb's party.

Davidson is one of the wildest, most thinly populated counties in the wild, mountainous portion of the State of North Carolina. Illicit "stills" flourish throughout its entire breadth and length, and the man with the longest rifle and the surest eye is the master in any dispute. Bold indeed is the United States revenue officer who invades Davidson and tries to put the "moonshiners" out of business. Once across the Rowan County line, he is likely never to recross it alive.

So bitter was the feeling in Davidson County and so great was the sympathy for Clay Grubb that it was impossible to try the murder case there. The prosecution got a change of venue and brought the prisoner to Salisbury. Senator Overman and Cyrus B. Watson, who once ran for Governor, were Grubb's attorneys, and it was they who secured his release.

Grubb's wife is Obe Davis's sister. For years there has been bad blood between the Grubb and the Davis families, and it came to a crisis last Fall. Davis had been heard to say he was going to shoot his brother-in-law on sight, and both men provided themselves with pistols. They went around armed for a long time without seeing one another. Then one day they went to church, and that was their last meeting—on this earth, anyway.

It was a country church in a clearing in the pine forest. The men saw one another when they were a hundred yards apart. Without the least evidence of excitement they coolly hitched their horses to trees and started toward one another. When they had come within range each man's hand went to his hip pocket and drew out a big pistol. Obe Davis fired the first shot, but it went wild. Clay Grubb fired two shots; one of them went through Davis's head and the other through his heart.

There was not the slightest concealment on the part of either man. And after Obe Davis was dead Grubb never denied having shot him. Self defense was his plea, and his attorneys pinned all their faith to that. With Davis dead the feud broke out fiercely. Grubb's enemies swore they would kill him; his friends swore they would protect him. If the trial had been held in Davidson County the jury would probably have been equipped with Winchester rifles. To secure a fair trial the prosecution secured a change of venue.

CHURCH TO AID CLERKS.

Clergymen in Sermons Will Urge Early Saturday Closing.

The Church Association for the Advancement of the Interests of Labor has taken up an agitation for early closing of the retail stores on Saturday, and will cooperate with the Retail Clerks' Union in bringing it about. It is said that when the clerks are kept in the stores until midnight on Saturdays, and sometimes later, they are too tired to attend church services on Sunday, but that if they could stop work at 9:30 P. M. they could attend divine service next day.

Bishop Potter and a number of prominent clergymen, who are members of the association, are taking an active part in the agitation. Among those who have already preached sermons on the subject are the Rev. John P. Peters, pastor of St. Michael's Protestant Episcopal Church, and the Rev. Dr. Payson of Mount Washington Presbyterian Church.

AN OPEN SUNDAY DECISION.

Can't Revoke Licenses for Sabbath Liquor Sales, Says St. Louis Judge.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, May 27.—Judge Moore of the Court of Criminal Correction decided this morning that Excise Commissioner Mulvihill could not revoke saloon licenses for remaining open on Sunday. He held that the Commissioner's power was limited to revoking licenses in such cases only after convictions had been obtained in court.

This decision in effect strikes at the constitutionality of the law defining the powers of the Excise Commissioner, and virtually ties his hands in the present Sunday observance campaign.

The saloonkeepers, backed by the breweries, it is said, will now wage open war upon Sunday closing, relying upon juries to acquit them as they did five years ago. Excise Commissioner Mulvihill says he will fight the case in the Supreme Court, to which he has appealed.

There will be a revival of the successful old farce comedy, "Charley's Aunt," this week at Proctor's Fifth Avenue Theatre. SHOT WOMAN AND KIMSELF.

Mrs. Weinert, Mother of Six, Murdered by Joseph Beyers.

Mrs. Annie Weinert, thirty-five years old, the wife of Albert Weinert, a plumber, of 670 East One Hundred and Forty-eighth Street, was killed about 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon by Joseph Beyers, thirty years old. Beyers then shot himself and is in Lincoln Hospital with a wound in his head. He probably will die within a few hours.

Weinert told the police that Beyers had been a source of trouble between his wife and himself for some time.

Last night, while the husband was absent, Beyers sent for Mrs. Weinert to meet him at a bird shop kept by Otto Jacobi at 609 Southern Boulevard. Jacobi was out, and the shop was in charge of an assistant named Frederick Knecht. Knecht was sent on an errand by Beyer. Upon his return he found Mrs. Weinert dead, with a pillow, which had apparently been thrust under head, burning. Beyers lay on the floor unconscious.

A note was found in the room which was apparently written by Beyers. It read:

Forgive us all. I can't live without Annie. She is the whole of my life.

Mrs. Weinert was the mother of six children.

At an autopsy performed by Dr. Riegelman at the Harlem Morgue last night, at which Coroner Berry was present, it was found that no bullet wound had been inflicted which would have caused death, the only one being on the left ear. Mrs. Weinert died of hemorrhage of the lungs.

Coroner Berry advanced the theory that she had been first choked, strangled, or smothered by Beyers, who, when he realized what he had done, fired the shots at the body in the hope of making it appear a suicide.

PRISONER WHO LIED.

Gets Nine Years in Sing Sing Instead of Three Months at Elmira.

John Swanker, who pleaded guilty to a charge of burglary in the Queens County Court on Friday and was sentenced by Judge Humphreys to three months in the penitentiary, was resentenced in the same Court yesterday on the same charge to nine years and ten months at hard labor in Sing Sing.

Judge Humphreys noticed on Friday that the papers in the case stated that the prisoner had never been arrested before. Swanker, who was neatly dressed and talked intelligently, impressed the Judge, who decided to give him a chance and sentenced him to three months in Elmira Reformatory.

Much to the court's surprise Swanker pleaded to be sent to the penitentiary. He promised to reform, and said he would not have anything to do with the other prisoners there. He was sent to the penitentiary.

Detective Sergeant Butler thought Swanker's request peculiar, and by an investigation Butler soon learned that the reason Elmira was not the place for Swanker was that he is recorded there as having served a sentence for burglary a short time ago. Judge Humphreys was informed, and ordered the young man brought before him.

The court delivered a severe lecture before sentencing Swanker to Sing Sing. The prisoner collapsed when he heard the new term.

IRREDENTISTS ON TRIAL.

Trieste Italians Accused of Trying to Start a Revolution.

VIENNA, May 27.—The trial is proceeding here of several Austro-Italians from Trieste, who are charged with high treason by engaging in a plot to start a revolution last Summer in the Italian provinces of Austria.

The trial has been followed with the keenest interest, and to-day considerable excitement developed owing to the receipt by one of the jurors of a letter from Trieste threatening the juror with death if any of the men on trial were convicted. The letter was signed by the Irredentist Committee. When the letter was published the Judge cleared the court and decided to conduct the trial behind closed doors in the future.

The trial will end next week.

HAMBURG LEADING, IS THE ST. PAUL'S REPORT

Ailsa Second, Thirteen Miles Astern the German Schooner.

ATLANTIC BEHIND ENDYMION

Yachtsmen, Puzzled to Explain Discrepancies in the Disptach, Give the Riddle Up.

The Atlantic is again reported behind the Hamburg and Endymion in the Kaiser's Cup race, and the Ailsa is now added to the vanguard that is leading her. This was the information sent by wireless by the St. Paul through Siasconsett yesterday. Hitherto the followers of the Marshall schooner have refused to credit the report, as the identification seemed insufficient and the position most unlikely. Now they do not know what to believe. There are points about the St. Paul's Marconigram that suggest that her information was gotten from other ships. If this is the case it is uncertain whether it is Capt. Barr's boat after all. As a result yachtsmen are at sea as to what to believe, and they eagerly await the arrival of the American liner to-day to learn the true situation.

The St. Paul's message reads:

Steamship St. Paul, via Marconi Station, Siasconsett, Mass.—Hamburg leading Ailsa by thirteen miles. Then came Endymion, Atlantic, Fleur de Lys, and Valhalla long distance astern.

Hamburg's position May 24, 6:32 A. M., Latitude 40.6, Longitude 50.35; May 24, 6:50 P. M., Greenwich time—Endymion, Latitude 42.20, Longitude 43.45; May 24, 7:39 P. M.—Atlantic, Latitude, 41.49, Longitude 45.02. All well.

Endymion, 1,385 miles east of Sandy Hook Lightship. Atlantic 1,325 miles east of starting line.

It will be noticed at once that the German's position is 300 behind that of the Endymion and Atlantic, and sighted thirty-four hours earlier. The St. Paul could not have seen her there, and had she seen her later would probably have reported the later position. Her information of the Hamburg therefore is evidently second hand, and presumably that of the Ailsa as well. The time allowed for the German to go from 1,078 knots out to 1,385 knots out would not admit of being much in advance of the Endymion, so the value of the information contained in the dispatch is therefore questioned.

The Atlantic's position as recited by her would be 57 knots west of that in which the Endymion was seen and 31 knots south. To traverse this distance the St. Paul would have to go sixty-three miles. To do this she allows herself 49 minutes, according to the difference in time between sighting the two boats, which again suggests some peculiarity in the method of locating them.

All these factors are taken into consideration by the yachtsmen who are following the races closest, and they are accordingly bewildered to explain the discrepancies. The Atlantic, to be where she is reported by the St. Paul, would have run from 920 knots out to 1,397 knots out in seventy-two hours. This is less than 6 knots an hour. In this time she has been said to have been in the same general neighborhood of the other boats of the fleet since midnight of the 21st, and yet to have gotten breezes only sufficient to drive her 370 knots, while the others have gone in the neighborhood of 500. Such a condition is possible, of course, but seems unlikely for so long a period.

As one prominent yachtsman expressed it:

"The St. Paul's dispatch is so involved that it is impossible to get an idea from it. At first it seems as though she has seen all five boats. Then she gives positions of three, one and probably two of which she could not possibly have obtained herself. Which are right and where they came from no one knows. Until I learn more I will believe common sense—that the Atlantic, which led twenty-four hours when four days out is unlikely to have been passed by four boats slower than she is and to have gone many miles out of her way to fall in with them. I cannot conceive how she could well be in the position reported by the St. Paul."

Another report comes from La Lorraine, which arrived yesterday from Havre, stating she saw a racer in latitude 42.18, longitude 47.20, 1,170 miles out, at 11 A. M. on May 24, but could not identify her. "It was probably the Atlantic," suggested a wag. "She's going backward." Capt. Alix thought it was the Hamburg.

RAILWAY MAN A SUICIDE.

Cut His Throat Twice and Then Turned on the Gas.

SCRANTON, Penn., May 27.—Fred. A. Dickinson, local passenger agent for the Jersey Central Railroad, was found dead in bed to-day by his wife on her return from a visit to Philadelphia. His throat had been cut twice with a pair of scissors and gashed once with a razor.

Death, however, was caused by gas which flowed from an open jet in his bedroom and a disconnected hose leading to a gas range on the first floor. All the windows were tightly closed and the house was filled with gas from cellar to garret. The suicide theory is accepted.

DR. DODDS'S APPEAL DENIED.

Would-Be Congressman Dropped by Reformed Presbyterian Church.

NEW CASTLE, Penn., May 27.—When the General Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church met to-day, the appeal of Dr. Joseph S. Dodds of Pittsburg from the verdict of expulsion rendered by the East End Presbyterian Church of that city, was taken up, and the action of the Pittsburg Presbytery was confirmed.

Dr. Dodds, who was an Elder in the church, was a candidate for Congress on the Prohibition ticket last Fall, in violation of a rule of the denomination to abstain from political affairs until the Government recognizes God by placing His name in the United States Constitution.

THE MODERN TREATMENT OF CRIME.

"The indeterminate sentence for crime" is to most minds, we fancy, a rather indefinite phrase, and the impression it gives is not wholly a favorable one. It suggests a vagueness that is wholly absent from the principle on which it is based. If it were practicable to make common use of the phrase "reformative sentence for crime," it would much more accurately describe the thing referred to, and it would bring out clearly the important, the essential, contrast with the "punitive sentence for crime" which is the prevailing system and the sole alternative.

This essential contrast is very concisely but very effectively brought out by EUGENE SMITH, Esq., the very competent and faithful President of the New York Prison Association, in a recent number of The Independent. Mr. SMITH, previous to his acceptance of the Presidency of the Prison Association, was for a score of years its Secretary. His knowledge of the subject, therefore, is that of an expert, and his sound judgment and singularly candid temper enable him to treat it with real authority. We have spoken of the indefiniteness of the impression produced by the term "indeterminate sentence," as commonly employed; but it is as nothing compared to the confusion actually existing in our criminal system, a confusion to which we are blinded by familiarity, and, we fear, by indifference as well. The various States had until recently pretty much the same notion of the nature of crime and the object of penalties. Crime, they thought, is a wrong for which retribution is to be exacted, and retribution has taken the form of fine, of imprisonment, or, in capital cases, of death. But imprisonment for larceny may be for two years in Louisiana and twenty years in Connecticut; for perjury it may be five years in New Hampshire and twenty years across the border in Maine; in Missouri the penalty may be death, while in Delaware it is a fine with no imprisonment. There are many other instances of this gross and ridiculous waywardness in the treatment of the same crimes, on the same theory of retribution, by communities possessing pretty much the same degree of intelligence and moral sense. Plainly, as Mr. SMITH declares, it is "not a practicable theory." After generations of application it results in absurd contradictions—a proof that it does not really satisfy either the moral sense or the intelligence of the people trying to work it out.

It has inherent and ineradicable vices. In the first place it neither effectually punishes the offender, as it essays to do, nor protects society. On the one hand it tends to confirm the offender in his crime; on the other, it turns him loose, at the expiration of his term of confinement, to wreak his criminal tendency on society, which has give up all hold on him until it can catch him again. Practically the law declares war on the criminal in the name of society, and, after making of him an open enemy tempted and almost forced to keep up the fight on his side, releases him after its first capture. The working of the theory is shown by the fact that the oftener a criminal has "served time," the more dangerous he is, and the kindred fact that all the leaders, planners, expert executants of crime are graduates of the prisons, which, more or less inevitably, are colleges of crime, with extensive post-graduate courses.

Now, the aim of the modern system of dealing with criminals is to protect society by reforming, so far as practicable, the criminal. The system drops the notion of retribution, and, happily, drops with it the notion that crime can be "expiated." It takes control of the offender at the moment of detection in a serious offense. It tries to fit him for an honest life. When he appears so fitted he is given a trial of liberty, but not unconditional. If he so bears himself as to give substantial proof that he can be trusted, he is wholly freed. If he fails he is taken hold of again and another trial is made. If the experiment is successful a man is saved and the security of the community is increased. If the experiment fail, the community is no worse for it. In the greater number of cases in which this system has been tried it has succeeded, and the chances of success are, of course, constantly increased by experience. Nine of the States, two in New England, two of the old Middle States, three in the Middle West, and two in the Northwest, have now incorporated this principle more or less completely in their criminal law, and it is steadily gaining ground. As Mr. SMITH points out, it does not apply logically to crimes punishable by death or by imprisonment for life. Men capable of these are in his judgment too dangerous to be released. They are a class apart. As to the rest he is amply justified in the conclusion that "in the universal adoption of the indeterminate sentence, with all that it logically involves, rests the strongest hope for final victory in the contest, which has hitherto been a losing contest, for the suppression of crime."

"THE RETURN OF THE NATIVE."

Speaking of the case of MARCUS BRAUN, alleged to have been annoyed and interrupted by the Austrian police in his mission of investigating, in the interest of the Department of Commerce and Labor, the emigration from Austria-Hungary to the United States, a correspondent whose communication we print elsewhere makes, in a very entertaining manner, a very sound point. The point is that the United States ought never to send back as their representative to his native land a naturalized citizen in any representative capacity.

In the Braun case there were reasons against sending him additional to those which would prevail in the case of an ordinary diplomatic or Consular official. His mission was really that of a detective, trying to spy out collusion between the Austrian Government and the steamship lines in unloading the Austro-Hungarian "defectives" on the United States. It was necessarily invidious. It was a mistake to clothe the detective with any official credentials, if in truth he had any. It would have been much better to send him out as a private "sleuth" to find out what he could by the methods commonly employed by detectives. Reverse the position and assume that a foreign spy—German, Austrian, Russian, what you will—was in this country seeking to make points against the conduct of our Government, and we can readily understand with what degree of cordiality he would be received, he and his credentials, if his own Government had been so ill-advised as to intrust him with credentials.

But in any case our correspondent is perfectly in the right. To send an expatriated man back to the country of his origin as the representative of his second country is a procedure which we have fallen into the habit of adopting, being moved thereto mainly by the consideration that he "knows the language." That advantage is really trifling as compared with the serious disadvantages which it is sure to involve. It would be easy to show by actual examples that the exile thus forced back upon the country which he has abandoned is merely endured, that he is almost sure to be a pariah in the society of the capital to which he is sent, and that he is debarred from rendering the service to his adopted country which a native of it would be able to render, of no greater general qualifications, and in spite of a total ignorance of the language of the country, provided he were familiar with the diplomatic language, the second language of official circles in every capital of Europe. Now that we seem to be in the way of preparing for the establishment of a real Diplomatic and Consular Service, the attention of the appointing power cannot be too strongly directed to the mischievousness and folly of the practice of returning exiles to the country of their birth. There may be one exception in ten thousand cases. But that exception would suffice only to prove the rule.

MEDICAL SUPERVISION IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

At a recent meeting in this city of the Medical Inspectors of the Health Department and others in interest, Dr. JOHN J. CRONIN, Chief of the Division of Medical School Inspection under the Board of Health, gave some facts respecting the work now in progress which are likely to have great public interest. The importance of this work, not merely with reference to the welfare of impaired and infected children, but equally with reference to that of the normal and healthy children, is so evident as not to need explanation. It should have the cordial and sympathetic co-operation of parents.

The physical examination conducted by the Health Department's School Inspectors, all of whom are now physicians specially trained in this work, is very comprehensive. Special attention is paid to the child's nutrition, to cardiac derangements or pulmonary diseases, nervous affections, deformities of limbs or spine, and to throat and nose affections. It is hoped that any tuberculous diseases that may be detected will be properly cared for either privately or in public institutions, and that tuberculous children will be taught separately from healthy children. Children with heart disease need to be dealt with gently, and should be educated as much as possible for a mental or light skilled manual occupation. Care is taken that such children be not allowed to take part in athletic games or other forms of severe exertion. Children with St. Vitus's dance and other nervous affections need special medical and educational treatment and should be taught in classes arranged for them. Normal children imitate nervous symptoms very quickly. Deformities of the limbs are often corrigible if detected early, and grow worse if neglected. Adenoid growths and large tonsils are not only dangerous to the child's health, but also retard his mental development. By notifying the parents of the existence of any of these conditions the department hopes to place every child so far as possible upon the best physical condition to pursue his studies.

Perhaps the greatest good accomplished by this work is in the detection and correction of defects of vision in school children. The Inspectors found within the past few months that about one-third of all children in the schools have defects of vision interfering with their studies. Of these a large number already have procured glasses. This has resulted in a noticeable improvement in their work at school, as shown by the teachers' reports. The reason why so many children have been found backward in their studies as related to their age is that there are so many with physical defects such as deficient vision or hearing who are unable to keep up with normal children and retard the progress of the classes.

Physical defects of one sort or another are also a fruitful cause of bad habits, of truancy, and of moral obliquity in later life. It is said to be the physically defective who either leave school prematurely or become hopeless truants. Truancy is the first stage of a criminal career, and by improving the physical condition of children many may be saved for lives of usefulness. It is as hard for a truly healthy child to do or think wrong as it is for a child defective in body or mind to do or think right. An eminent criminologist has said that man is responsible for the good that he does, while for the bad we must hold accountable the diseased conditions of his body or mind.

This interesting and beneficent work should be developed systematically from year to year, and sufficient appropriations should be made to insure that it is thorough and continuous.

A PRESBYTERIAN LITURGY.

Persons brought up after the strictest sect of Presbyterianism have undergone so many shocks within the last few years that another more or less may not particularly matter. But still the proposal for what can be called only a Presbyterian liturgy, made by Dr. HENRY VAN DYKE, is still calculated to make to sit up in astonishment the Presbyterian General Assembly to which it was made. The "service book" prepared by Dr. VAN DYKE contains "offices," as the English Prayer Book has it, for what that Prayer Book describes as the baptism of infants and of those of riper years, for the administration of the Lord's Supper, for the solemnization of matrimony, and for the burial of the dead, besides forms of prayer for general and special occasions.

We have said that this collection can be described only as a liturgy, in spite of the fact that its compiler denies that it is a liturgy. It is a collection of "forms of sound words" for use on the several occasions to which it is applied. We should expect that such a proposal would be made, if by any Presbyterian minister, by one well known for literary and aesthetic sensibility, as Dr. VAN DYKE eminently is. The practice of improvisation may be tolerated when the officiating clergyman happens to be a man of genius, of sympathy, and of taste. But in the nature of things this combination is not common. Oftentimes every element of it is absent. Whoever has attended many funerals, to take the most crucial instance, in which the minister was left free to say whatever came into his head, must have been shocked and disgusted much oftener than he has been edified, and must have earnestly desired the substitution of the beautiful and impersonal service of the Prayer Book, which deals with the mere fact of mortality. Personal and special applications of that impersonal and general formula may be added. But in most cases we believe that the mourners would prefer that they should be omitted, unless the clerical improviser were also a special friend of the dead or of the family. MATTHEW ARNOLD, in his essays on the Burials bill, gave excellent reasons for the use of an established formula, as opposed to leaving the minister to say whatever came into his head and the funeral assemblage to wonder what the minister was going to say.

It is true that the adoption of a liturgical service would deprive Presbyterianism of one of its distinctive marks. But to those who believe that differences, whether in shades of doctrine or in orders of Church government, are obstacles which should not be permitted to stand in the way of Christian unity, in the way of converting and amalgamating all the Churches into one great "National Society for the Promotion of Goodness," that consideration would not seem either conclusive or even very relevant.

RUSSIAN NAMES.

A Russo-American precisian wishes to promote Yankee accuracy in the use of Muscovite personal names, and says that of the distinguished Admiral about to front Togo in the Eastern seas [illegible] to this except that it piles additional consonantal lumber on the appellation—a Pelion of gutturals on an Ossa of dentals, with a Mount Athos of sizzling sibilants laid on the top, giving thus its tribute of more to that which, measured by the usage of other nations or the majority of them, already had too much. After he has met his adversary in the Oriental waters, where he is now seeking him or being sought, it will be seen whether it is of more or less importance to posterity with what precision of alphabetical detail or lack of it his name is bugled down the avenues of futurity.

Lord BYRON found the Muscovite appellations somewhat ragged on the edges, but he managed to work them into his rhymes:

There was Strongenoff, Strokonoff,
And Tschittshakoff and Roguenoff and Chokenoff,
And more might be found out if he could poke enough
Into Gazettes—but Fame—Capricious Strumpet,
It seems has got an ear as well as Trumpet.

To be sure, the difficulty with proper names which many people find is not confined to those of any particular nation. MILTON found in the Scottish patronyms "Colquitto and Macdonald and Gallasp," terms that "would have made QUINTILIAN stare and gasp," though usage has not only reconciled the non-Pictish world to them, but set them as the crown of meritorious wearers in altitudes severe and gracious where everything is touched into adornment and dignity.

FREDERICK the Great, much served by Scotsmen and by none better, found Dalrymple an impossible appellation, though when presented to him there was a particularly smart Caledonian behind it. However, the great King and soldier got used to it after a while, seeing in the interval nothing in the least out of the way in such home designations as Bummelphlug, for example, by no means an exaggerated specimen of Fatherland surnames in that time or in this.

Nations and races have to grow familiar with each other's names, a process which war, with fame's trumpetings blown on its front, promotes—then they are easy enough. Even such heavily fringed cognomens as POBEDONOSTSEFF—if that is the way he spells it—and others

Ending in ischkin, ouschkin, iffschy, ouskl,
Of which we need insert but Rousamouskl, grow manageable with use and familiarity, and their spelling in foreign countries preserves a certain measure of uniformity. Admiral ROZHDESTVENSKI is not likely to get all his alphabetical belongings at once and every time, but if he whips Togo the world will work around to that result gradually, which is all that can reasonably be expected. The correspondents' plea for the integrity of his name and that of other distinguished Muscovites is respectable, and should not be denied consideration. But we are very busy here; time is short, and the Muscovite appellation in general long, strung with lettered superfluities in number as the shells of Otaheitan cowries whose value, at the most not much, is altogether in their collocation. A friendly people, as we are, will not be unwilling to "take a fall" out of the rugged Russian nomenclature, well nigh as formidable as its Bear, though we are rather sanguine that we shall come off second best.

BOTTINES AND TORPEDOES.

There is probably no German-American matron extant of ill-deserving sufficient to justify the sending to her of a pair of shoes with a dynamite torpedo in the heel of one of them powerful enough to blow up a house. But that is what has just happened to a lady of Uniontown, near Pittsburg, a Pennsylvania hamlet of such modest fame that the incident will perhaps be remembered as the most exciting in its history. No other town anywhere can show such an occurrence, and it is to be hoped that it may remain a unique example.

There is indeed something diabolical in the conception of it, to make the Uniontown public, and a wider one, for that matter, "stand at gaze like JOSHUA's moon in Ajalon." The machine was devised to go off "for sure"; the shoes were of the high-heeled variety; one of them was bored out and the torpedo inserted; four caps were so fitted that the thing would explode as soon as it was stepped on, and its malign inventor saw in fancy something less than a quarter of a ton of German-American femininity, conjecturally meritorious and well-deserving, sent like Gilderoy's kite revolving aloft into the serene air of the overarching Pennsylvania heavens. But this not wholly unreasonable expectation fell short of fulfillment. The shoes were too big for the lady by several sizes. She was not going to exhibit herself as a plantigrade, as, according to a fading pleasantry, never with much wit or plausibility, the Chicago female is sometimes enforced to do. She wouldn't put them on, though the fact that "she didn't know they were loaded" had nothing to do with her abstention. Nobody expects a pair of shoes to be loaded like a field mortar or a culverin. The condition was found out while she was trying by minute inspection to determine who it was that sent them.

As only the greatest fool in Uniontown could imagine that she wore sev[illegible] when it was really fives, and those [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] itself down to dimensions giving a hopeful prospect that he would soon be found out. Probably he is merely a joker and not at all a serious-minded dynamitard like those turned out in Russia and Paterson, N. J. If so, his joke was a poor one, and his "sparring for position" as a humorist may be set down as a flat failure.

By the action of the Legislature, now sanctioned by the Governor, two mistakes of the city's charter-makers have been corrected. The Mayor elected this Fall will have a four years' term. This restores the provision of the charter existing prior to the ill-judged amendment that was the fruit of impatience of the long and evil administration of VAN WYCK. The power over streets and franchises which through a singular delusion entertained by the authors of the charter was conferred upon the Board of Aldermen is now taken away from that unworthy body and given to the Board of Estimate and Apportionment. These two measures are among the most important and salutary in the whole list of the last session's enactments. The tardy misgivings about the transfer of control over franchises which led to attempts to convince Gov. HIGGINS that he ought to sign the bill were wisely disregarded by him.

SQUELCHING A BOSTONIAN.

Ought to be Easy if a Few Hundreds Will Do It.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Will you kindly grant me a little space in your columns to reply to yesterday's communication by John R. Church, who wants you to "rouse some one with money enough to expend a few hundred dollars in squelching the bellowings and frothings of that arch blatherskite in Boston"?

If a few hundreds will squelch him, why don't you contribute them, Mr. Church, and thus win the everlasting gratitude of Wall Street? Is it that you have already "sacrificed your hard-earned savings" in the cause by helping this same Wall Street hold up a ballooned market, which the "fakir" says is due for a drop? Wall Street and its following are the only ones who have suffered from the "poisonous vaporings" so far.

No, Mr. Church, there isn't any law to punish a man for "distorting the truth to the intentional injury of corporations' security values." Now, if you had some evidence—just the least wee bit of evidence—that the "outpourings" are anything but truths, you and Wall Street could easily prevent them from reaching the "people at large, many of whom are misled to their great financial loss"!

Flags and Toleration.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In discussing the question of "Flags and Toleration" in your columns, it appears to me that one point has not been emphasized as it should be, and it is this: That although it is doubtless true that the majority of United States flags displayed in London appear on hotels, &c., yet American residents in England may and do, on both American and English holidays raise their own flag without fear of hindrance, while British residents in this land, where there is so much yelping about freedom, must think twice before doing so, unless they wish to gain an unpleasant notoriety. But though the British flag is not tolerated here, the so-called Irish flag unquestionably is.

Ventilation by Request Difficult.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I wish to add the account of a trifling incident to the controversy on the subject of the ventilation of street cars. Yesterday morning at 10 o'clock I entered a Broadway car at Fifty-ninth Street and Seventh Avenue. It was one of those cars which run to Fifty-ninth Street and then return. Of course, every one on board alighted and a number of new passengers got on. I seated myself by the rear door. Every window, the front door, and most of the ventilators were tight shut, and the air in the car was stifling. I was the last one to pay my fare, and as the conductor had nothing to do at the moment I politely requested him to open some of the ventilators. With the well-known condescending air of his kind he replied: "You will have to wait a little while." His manner was decidedly impertinent. At the end of perhaps five minutes, during which he had little to do, he carelessly poked open two ventilators, one of which closed again immediately. I took the man's number, but am not sure to whom a complaint should be addressed.

Objects to the Governor's Veto.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I wish to express my disapproval of the vetoing of the Stanley bill. Its passage would have injured no one, and would have been of great value to many innocent children, in partially removing the disgrace, attached by superficially thinking people, to the so-called illegitimate.

I am a woman, and I certainly would not consider my "womanhood insulted" if Adelia Quesada Barker and unfortunates like her were given a legal right to a name. No woman deserving the title would hesitate for a moment in giving her sanction.

The parents in this case are doing all they can to right the wrong they did the child. Had they placed her in an asylum and left her they would not in all probability have been designated as "brazen."

The passage of the bill would not benefit the parents.

One Way to Cure Subway Crowding.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The crowding on the Subway express trains during rush hours is due almost entirely to the passengers themselves. In going from one express station to another people consume more time waiting for an express than to board a local train at once. This morning I took particular notice, and found that quite a crowd of passengers waiting for an express at the Grand Central Station got off at Fourteenth Street. Had they taken a local they not only would have reached their station sooner, but would have had a comfortable seat besides.

Royal Relics for Sale.

From The London Express.

A lock of Napoleon's hair and a shoe worn by Queen Charlotte were sent to a sale of family heirlooms arranged by a committee of society women in the interest of impecunious ladies of good family, which was opened in Brook Street recently.

A portion of Queen Elizabeth's state kirtle, valued by its owner at £200, had a curious history. The kirtle came into the possession of her family over a century ago, and she, ignorant of its real value, had cut it up to give to her friends, until she only had a yard or two of the embroidery left. Queen Victoria on one occasion nearly became the purchaser of this interesting relic.

One of the most interesting items was a wonderful needlework portrait of Queen Victoria in her coronation robes, started in 1837 by the nuns in a Roman Catholic convent. The picture, which took many years to finish, is of much value to collectors of [illegible] [illegible]

The "Sentimental People" Who Are Accused of Thwarting It.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The Central Park of to-day has fulfilled the noble design of its founders. It is a living emerald set in the centre of Manhattan Island's thirteen miles of insensate brick and mortar. It is now contended that "sentiment and not common sense" stands in the way of its conversion into a parkway leading from the inexpensively developed region between Sixth and Seventh Avenues around the projected Pennsylvania Railroad station to the newer parks in the Bronx, and that this station has been planned as if with a view to this very thing.

Only get the sentimental people to stand aside and leave the matter to those best qualified to judge, "the architects and the landscape gardeners," as it is urged, and the city's emerald gems will be cut up into a thousand bits at a profit to all concerned in the job.

As well might the city be asked to harmonize the beautiful Riverside Drive with the stream of filthy smoke that is poured over it daily from the towering chimney across the river by the non-sentimental factory owner.

COURTESY TO THE SOUTH.

G. A. R. Veteran's Censure for Those Who Refuse to Extend It.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Forty years after the civil war of 1861 to 1865 the "road to harmony" should be easy, and no doubt is the aim and object of the true soldier of experience of both Union and Confederate veterans. As a Union volunteer, with an experience of four years, (having fought in nearly every prominent battle in which the Army of the Potomac was engaged, and having many scars of battle as a result,) I feel I can venture an opinion on all this discussion and noise arising from the bad manners of the pretentious un-American men who never inhaled the smoke of battle.

As a Grand Army of the Republic comrade, I would be the last man to manifest the least discourtesy to those American soldiers of the South who were at one time "foes worthy of our steel"—men who are now loyal citizens, interested in the progress of our country, ready to defend the flag should any foreign foe dare to insult it or invade American soil. I regret to confess there are a few short-term men who managed to get mustered into the Grand Army of the Republic both of New York City and Brooklyn now wearing bogus medals; on public occasions posing as having been brave men, assuming titles when they have no commissions from their States or the United States Government to verify their assumption.

These are the men, wearing an air of pompous vanity, vain conceit, and affected dignity, who are constantly ventilating their egotism for self-aggrandizement.

Most of the Confederate veterans whom we meet now residents of New York City are gentlemen of wide experience, position, and intelligence, having an interest in the progress of our whole country. When we as true soldiers of the Republic repel their courtesies, we injure our order in the minds of all American-thinking citizens.

In the language of the late hero General, U. S. Grant, "Let us have peace"! let us have harmony; let us fraternize now as brothers, doing away with all sectional feeling and bickering—"One country, one people, one flag."

PILLAGED, BUT USED TO IT.

Explanation of Public Indifference on Certain Questions.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The Washington dispatch in THE TIMES giving reasons for the change of front by the President in relation to the purchase of Panama supplies does not satisfy. To be sure, there may be some danger to the railroad rate bill of becoming side-tracked by Congress on account of it, but why submit to a gross injustice? It is a good thing to have free and unobstructed trade between the States. It would be a great blessing if we could have some of the shackles removed from our foreign trade as well.

It is no worse for these corporations that pay no Federal taxes whatever to rob the Government than to bleed the people. A good Republican said to me in speaking of this matter that he did not care, as he did not feel it.

To which I replied, by saying: "If one of your clerks should take a few dollars every day from your money box you would not care so long as you did not know or feel it?"

That is the trouble to-day with the American people, or a large part of them. They don't understand the matter, and they have no idea of how much they are pillaged. A man once asked a fish woman how she could be so cruel as to skin her eels alive. She replied by saying: "Oh, they don't mind; they are used to it."

A DEMOCRAT.

Westport, Conn., May 24, 1905.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The "Marcus Braun incident" is another proof of the necessity for our Government to establish once and for all the rule never to send a naturalized citizen back to his native land in any official position whatsoever. After he has "sworn off" his original allegiance he cannot be "persona grata."

Imagine the wrath of our Government, and more so of our press—white and tinted—should Great Britain send over W. W. Astor as her Ambassador, with young Bradley Martin and Marshall Roberts as Secretaries, or should the Federal Government at Berne appoint M. Francois de Gallatin, formerly Mr. F. D. Gallatin of New York, Minister to Washington? Those just named, and not a few more, were all born under the Stars and Stripes as free American citizens, but are now "subjects" of foreign Governments by their own choice.

Should the services of our adopted citizens be required abroad, send the French to Belgium and Italy, the Germans to Austria and Switzerland, the Swedes to Denmark, and so forth.

As Mr. Braun's mission seems to be of some importance, it stands to reason that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor should have informed the Secretary of State of the object of such a mission, adding the request to have the American Ambassador in Vienna and our Consuls in Austro-Hungary instructed to aid Mr. Braun in getting all information desired by the Department of Commerce.

A third lesson we may draw is that a President of a large social organization can do very excellent services during a Presidential campaign, but show himself deplorably deficient, when sent, as reward, on a political mission which requires tact and discretion, besides knowledge of matters and men.

Mr. Braun had evidently forgotten, if he ever knew, that the authorities in Austro-Hungary are, next to the Russians, the most autocratic in Europe.

"FACT, NOT FICTION."

New York, May 26, 1905.

Things it Must Come, Despite the Obvious Objections to It.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

One of your editorials to-day makes a very pretty dilemma substantially thus: Municipal operation is no better than the franchise system if the people elect honest officers; if they elect dishonest officers, it is much worse. You neglect an essential tertium quid—the people may elect now honest, now dishonest, officers. Franchises must be granted, if at all, for long terms—so at least it is often said—because good competition cannot be had for short ones. Dishonest officers may grant franchises for fifty or eighty years for small compensation to the city, perhaps for a lump sum.

If honest officers are afterward elected, there may be no more franchises to grant. The cost of robbery has fallen, not so much on the men who elected the robbers as on their children. As a puppy cannot be instructed by a whipping to-day for his offense of last month, so the people will not be much instructed by penalties for electing bad officers that do not fall till twenty years after.

Under municipal operation the people might quickly feel in bad or good service the penalty or reward for electing bad or good officers. Bad service might be an excellent thing for rousing the people against the machines. On the other hand, corrupt franchises may mean merely higher taxes, which fall upon the masses indirectly, and may be less felt than bad car and lighting service. I do not like the idea of municipal operation, but I fear we shall have to come to it.

OUGHT TO LEARN SPANISH.

Growing Business Advantage of a Knowledge of That Language.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In recent years the French language was predominant in our public and private quarters of tuition, as well as in business. It seems, however, that with the evolution the American Nation has experienced since the Spanish-American war, the Spanish language has almost entirely taken the place of the French. We now send and keep in constant touch with Spanish-speaking people our army and navy in the Philippines, in Porto Rico, and in Cuba. Our commerce has greatly developed with the Spanish-speaking countries, just as much with the ex-Spanish possessions as with the republics of Central and South America, which formerly sought mainly the European fields for their commerce.

Many Spanish-American commission houses have established their branches in this market, and in their offices young ladies or young men with some knowledge of Spanish are preferred to fill the positions, and the same thing happens in the domestic commission or export houses.

I earnestly advise our young people, male and female, to take advantage of their youth and dedicate some time every day to the learning of the Spanish language. A stenographer with a full knowledge of Spanish has a far better chance than her opponents in business who have not acquired Spanish.

Samuel Spencer as an Expert.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The views expressed by Samuel Spencer, President of the Southern Railway, upon the rate question are certainly entitled to the highest respect and consideration by the business and commercial world. A man who has accomplished so much in the industrial development of a large section of the country is entitled to speak from the standpoint of an expert. To a person acquainted with the industrial condition of the South—the natural impoverishment due to the plantation system and the havoc of the war, the marvelous development during the past few years appears marvelous. And in this connection the Southern Railway has been a most important and effective factor—a tower of strength to the entire South.

F. HOPKINSON SMITH LOVES TO GIVE TIPS

He Takes $200 to Distribute When He Goes to Europe.

TIP AND BE GLAD, SAYS HE

The Author-Artist's Contribution to the Literature on a Burning Question—Replies to Bok.

"I love to give tips. I always do it. I am delighted to have the opportunity of showing that I appreciate the little attentions of porters and waiters and all the other people who are so ready to go out of their way to make me comfortable. It's one of the luxuries of travel. If I couldn't give tips I think I'd stay at home."

Mr. F. Hopkinson Smith, author, artist, traveler, and man of affairs, leaned forward in his chair, his eyes shining with enthusiasm and emphasized these revolutionary statements with outstretched hand. The other hand, plunged deep in Mr. Smith's trousers pocket, seemed about to extract a willing half dollar. The blue smoke of his cigar curled about Mr. Smith's carefully brushed gray hair as though it had been generously dealt with and loved to linger around him.

"It wouldn't take two looks to see that the genial creator of Col. Carter of Cartersville never belonged to an anti-tipping association. One glance and the laziest porter that ever encumbered a car platform would start forward to take his bag, and the most absent-minded waiter hurry to give him the best seat at the table by the window. He looks like a servants' bank with the cash drawer open and the deposit window shut, and the reporter collecting opinions on the immortal tipping question knew in a moment that he had come to the right place for the affirmative side.

Mr. Smith was induced to give his views on tipping after perusal of remarks by Mr. Edward W. Bok, the Philadelphia philosopher, on the same subject. Mr. Bok has been saying things about tips. He is troubled by the thought that the practice of tipping and the size of the tips are both on the increase.

Mr. Bok says that the influence of the vulgar, ostentatious rich of New York has so exaggerated the tipping evil that it threatens to become a National plague, and he wonders how we can criticise employes of the Government for taking bribes when we ourselves indulge in bribery, to wit, tipping, almost daily.

Mr. Smith does not agree with Mr. Bok. He does not undertake to criticise the Philadelphia social observer for thinking as he does, but Mr. Smith's temperament and experiences in life have led him to a different view.

THE PLEASURE OF TIPPING.

"Dickens," remarked Mr. Smith, brushing aside the dolorous views of Mr. Bok a little reproachfully, as he might wave away cold soup. "Dickens said that he never looked over a newsboy's shoulder that he didn't long to give him a shilling. That's something like my case. I love to tip waiters, porters, stewards, and all the rest of those who help me to get along comfortably. They deserve it, and it is as great a pleasure for me to give as it can be for them to receive.

"Now look at it. The Pennsylvania Railroad, for instance, cannot be expected to provide a corps of men to carry my bag from the train, put it in a cab, and see me off comfortably to my destination. The State provides that the railroad shall carry passengers at the rate of so much a mile; the company cannot add a dollar to the legal charge. Yet there you find these porters, perfectly trustworthy and reliable, ready to take care of your bag or telegraph your wife or find the cab, all in addition to their proper duties. Isn't it only reasonable, then, that you should help to increase their small salaries by giving them a tip for their trouble?

"I love to give darkeys 25 cents. I always do it. I find them in return polite and prompt and willing to do anything for me. I took one of them with me to Mexico once as a messenger. There never was a more faithful, trustworthy, and willing darky than that fellow.

ABROAD, COUNT $200 FOR TIPS.

"The same thing in going abroad. I regard tips as part of the legitimate expenses of the trip. It is proper and fair that you should be willing to pay for the extra attentions and k[illegible]ness you will receive, attentions whi[illegible]o steamship company or hotel proprietor could be expected to provide for you, but in which the traveler finds half the pleasure of his holiday. So, when I estimate the expenses of my trip I put down so much for steamship and railway fare, so much for hotels, so much for other expenses, then add $200 for tips—money just to give away. I have the worth of it many times over in the comforts I enjoy wherever I go and the satisfaction I feel.

"If a man can't afford to do that I think he should stay at home, or be content to travel as a poor man should, under such circumstances as his income will justify.

"The first thing I do after boarding the steamer is to send for the second steward and fee him. I give him a twenty-mark or a twenty-franc gold piece—$5 in the currency of his country. Then I have ascertained his services, and I know that there is nothing in his power that he will not do for me.

"The same thing in the hotel in which I expect to make a long stay. I send for the head waiter. The others can wait, but they know that they will be remembered, and I am certain to receive a thousand little attentions and a thousand kindnesses which no hotel, however good, could assure to its patrons unless the servants desired to volunteer them.

LITTLE THINGS THAT COUNT.

"Of course, it is all nonsense to say that you will not receive proper service and will meet with discourtesy unless you give a tip. No first-class hotel will permit that for a moment. But it is the little attentions, the forethought for your comfort, that count, and these come cheaply enough at the cost of a small fee, which you can refuse if you will, but which I think you should be only too willing to give.

"And the friends you make and the pleasant little bits of other life that you are permitted to see, all through the consideration shown in a tip. Now, at the Hotel Vendome, in Paris, there is Francois, the maitre d'hotel, and his little wife, Aline. They have two children and a little home at Aix. All their lives they have been hard at work in Paris, trying to save enough to pay for that home and to live in it before the children are grown up.

"I give François $2 every time I go there, and as soon as I arrive both of them come to welcome me and make me feel at home. I have gained the friendship of an excellent maitre d'hotel and a most excellent femme de chambre. [illegible] of life to think that I sooner. As I say, it's part of the luxury of travel.

GIVE THE WAITER A DOLLAR.

"As to waiters, remember this: The waiter in a first-class hotel abroad has learned five languages, so that he can speak with his patrons in their own tongue, whichever of the five it may be. A man in any other occupation who can speak five languages is rather an extraordinary person, but that is quite common among waiters.

"Now, what hotel can afford to pay that man to wait on you the sum to which he is entitled by the accomplishments he has learned for your benefit and convenience? No hotel at all, and I think you ought to be willing to fee that waiter just to show your appreciation of the long apprenticeship he has served to win your favor.

"You can afford to do it. Spend a little less on your meal. If you intended to eat a five-dollar dinner take a dinner that costs $4 and give the waiter $1. To look at it from a purely selfish point of view it will pay you. You will have a better repast, and your stay at table will be made more enjoyable for you in every way.

A GIRL THAT NEEDED TIPS.

"Here's an incident to show what the tip often means: One night last Winter I lectured at a college in a small town in Nebraska. It was such a small town that there wasn't a cab at the station when I got there, and I was glad to take the hotel omnibus—all the more glad because there was a foot of snow on the ground and I had lost my fur overcoat, and did not find it till next day.

"It was an unpretentious hotel. The proprietor himself showed me to my room and brought me hot water. As we went through the corridor I saw a girl—quite an ordinary girl, spectacled, thin haired, and short necked—putting a child to sleep. When I returned to the hotel after midnight the same girl asked me if I would have any supper.

"I got up the next morning at 7 o'clock to catch a train. The girl who waited on me at breakfast asked if I would have some buckwheat cakes. When I said I would she told me that I would have to wait a little while she cooked them.

"I saw it was the same girl. I happened to notice, too, that when she served the cakes she seemed anxious and rather in a hurry. Looking through the window I could see the students, blowing on their fingers to keep them warm, tramping through the snow to the college three-quarters of a mile away. I said to the girl:

"'Are you a student?'

"'Yes, Sir,' she said.

"'And you are working your way through college by doing all the work here? Is there nobody else?'

"'No, Sir; nobody,' she said.

"And there she was—chambermaid, nurse, cook, and waitress. Up till 12:45 o'clock in the morning and at work again by 7, studying at college between times.

"Now, what kind of a human being would he have been who would have refused to tip that waitress? And how could you ever find out such persons except through some friendly association due to the tip? As I say, I am delighted to have the opportunity of helping these people. That's my feeling toward them, and the tip is my way of showing it.

MY FRIEND JOSEPH OF VENICE.

"I am not so sure that they don't appreciate the good-will shown in the tip more than the mere tip itself. Now, at the Britannia, in Venice, there is old Joseph, the head porter, whom I have seen there for twenty years. His health gave out last year, and he went to a hotel in the Engadine. When I passed that way it was only a matter of five minutes to turn aside and see old Joseph, and he was delighted.

"He is going back there this year, and will be most glad to see me, as I will be to see him. Year after year he has watched over me to get a chair or call a gondola, or to fetch my overcoat when it was growing chill—to show me a hundred other attentions. The hotel doesn't pay him for those attentions. It pays him to be polite and answer questions. But he knows, from the fact that I give him a tip, that I appreciate his services.

OVERTIPPING AND UNDERTIPPING.

"No doubt the tipping privilege is abused, though I must admit that I have never known an instance. There may be hotels where on your departure you will find every man and woman about the place, whether they have done anything for you or not, lined up for a fee. In that case you would be foolish to tip those who have done nothing—the chambermaid from across the hall, the porter from the next house, and so on. Yet some people do. And then they come here and complain about it.

"'You Americans do one of two things,' the manager of one of the big European hotels said to me. 'You give either too little or too much.'

"That is just it. Some people fill every hand that is held out, because it is held out, and they are afraid of appearing shabby; or else they give nothing at all to anybody. But the experienced traveler will make no mistake. He will know those who have performed services for him and will reward them, and the grafters who have done nothing will usually know better than to approach him.

BE GLAD TO TIP.

"I love to tip. It is one of the ways—in some cases the only way—of showing your good-will toward the humble people who do their best to make life pleasant for you. There are some things you cannot approach on a commercial basis, and tipping is one of them. You don't, and can't, pay the hotel or the transportation company for half of the little favors you gladly receive. They come to you from the kindness that the porters and waiters and the rest show you.

"So don't sulk over the tips. Set aside a liberal allowance for them and distribute it wisely and gladly, or—stay at home. That is my philosophy, and it is the result of twenty-five years of travel."

DEATH SPOILS GAY WEDDING.

Uncle of the Bride Buried Before His Silver Anniversary Came.

John Sheafe Douglas, son of Mrs. Mary Sheafe Douglas, and Miss Honor Ellsworth Barr, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Ellsworth Barr, was married yesterday at the home of the bride's parents.

It was the original intention to celebrate at the same time the silver weddings of the bride's parents and her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. Turle, who had a double wedding on May 27, 1880, but Mr. Turle died suddenly several days ago, and the plan was abandoned. Miss Hildegarde Turle was to have been a bridesmaid. She withdrew, and Miss Rosalie Gardiner Jones filled the vacancy.

The bride, in white satin, trimmed with point lace and wearing a point lace veil, was attended by her sister, Miss Gillian Barr, as maid of honor and by the Misses Jones, Helena Rutherfurd Ely, Hilda Goodwin, Grace Quackenbush, Maria Douglas, and Lucie Mayo-Smith as bridesmaids. Mr. Douglas's best man was his brother, Frederick Douglas. The ushers were Reginald Jevons, Louis Berrian, Horatio Kraus, and Washington Brauns. The maid of honor was in white lace and the bridesmaids in white chiffon with touches of silver.

TWELVE-FOOT COBRA HAS HELSTROM'S BUNK

CHARMER CHANTS IN VAIN

Huge Snake Is Supposed to Have Berthed in Kybfels's Forecastle for Forty-one Days.

Aboard the East India steamer Kybfels, just arrived at the foot of Forty-second Street, Brooklyn, from Calcutta, there was discomfort last night.

Before the entrance to the forecastle sat a lanky Hindu stoker chanting dismally and waving his hands to something in the darkness of the forecastle. Disconsolate on the forward hatch sat Carl Helström, who had no bunk to sleep in, while Alexander McAllister, chief engineer, bawled through his cabin porthole:

"Hit it a bang on the held wi' a monkey wrinch, Bara Singh! But for guidness sake stop that cheap eemeetation o' bagpipes!"

The "it" to which McAllister referred was a hooded cobra which Bara Singh was trying to charm out of the bunk of the unhappy Carl Helström, who, without knowing why his bunk was so soft, had slept on a cobra twelve feet long for parts of forty-one nights and days.

The cobra was not discovered until Customs Officers Hooley and O'Neill were going through the quarters of the Kybfel's crew in search of little gifts that might be intended for friends ashore.

Hooley came to the bunk of Carl Helström. Helström was in it, slumbering sonorously. The customs men awoke him to say they wanted to look under the mattress for possible bunches of tobacco or necklaces from India's coral strand. The moment Hooley attempted to draw aside the mattress out popped a hideous head, the neck behind which flattened like a flabby balloon pressed in the middle.

The customs officers started back; so did Helström, who seemed as much surprised as anybody.

"See any snakes on the manifest?" asked Hooley of his brother officer. O'Neill scanned the list.

"Couldn't see a snake on that manifest with a three weeks' jag," said he. "Smuggling live animals. Call the Captain."

Capt. Hankow came and glared at Carl Helström.

"You," said the Captain. "What do you mean by bringing snakes aboard this vessel without my consent?"

"Snakes—me—bring snakes!" stammered Carl. "I dunno where dat snake coom from."

"Possibly," said the Captain to the customs officers, "the snake came aboard at Calcutta and got into Helström's bunk."

Helström's eyes dilated and his mouth opened wide.

"An' we ban forty-vun day coomin'?" he cried. "No vonder I haf so soft bonk. I sleep me forty-vun night on big snake? O-o-oa-a-ah!"

"Nonsense," said O'Neill to the Captain. "Snakes don't swarm about the docks of Calcutta, do they?"

"That's so," said the Captain. "But there were a couple of snake charmers aboard at Calcutta. Maybe it got away from them, or maybe you've made a mistake. I shouldn't be surprised if you didn't see any snake at all—that is—I mean to say—anyhow, we can soon find out."

"Sure," said the Customs officers. "Let's see whether its a snake or a crocodile. When we've classified it we'll measure up the tariff."

Capt. Hankow said something in Hindustani to a coolie boy who was pounding rice in the sunshine at the forecastle door. The boy departed and presently returned with Nounan, Khusan Kahn, Citihal, and Iboran, Hindu stokers, who, on being asked if they knew how to charm snakes, made a rush for the engine room ventilators and shouted:

"Bara Singh! Bara Singh! Jaldi ao!"

Presently there emerged from the depths of the ship a tall, dusky, half-naked figure, surmounted by a keen, dark face framed in matted locks of black hair. The slave of the stokehole salaamed to the gold braid on the customs uniform.

"Me Bara Singh!" he said, in a deep, guttural voice.

"You sing snake song?" asked the Captain.

"Well, get an alleged reptile out of that bunk. Chela jao!"

Bara Singh squatted in front of the bunk and began to sing. Whether it was the charm of the song or the misery of it that brought out a twelve-foot reptile from under the bunk of Carl Helström is not known, but it is certain that by the time seven feet had emerged from under the mattress Bara Singh, Capt. Hankow, and Customs Officers Hooley and O'Neill were not in sight.

The customs officers returned to Manhattan quite satisfied that a snake not on the manifest was at least in the bunk of Helström, and so they reported to Collector Stranahan, who ordered that it be put on the manifest and taxed as a "live animal" at the rate of 20 per cent. of its value.

But Helström declares that the snake, which crawled back into his bunk when Bara Singh went away, is of no value to him whatever. And Capt. Hankow's valuation is not likely to swell the funds of the Treasury.

Late last night the situation aboard the Kybfels was unchanged. Bara Singh, whose reputation as a snake charmer is at stake and whose only excuse for fleeing is that he didn't know the snake was a cobra until he saw it, has resumed a squatting position at a respectful distance from the bunk, and, assisted by the chorus of Citihal, Iboran, and Khusan Khan, was pouring forth upon the night "snake music" which McAllister, the engineer, shaking his fist through the porthole of his cabin, compared to "The Land o' the Leal,' on a tin whussle."

What's to be done with that snake is a vexed problem.

TRIED TO EAT IRON FENCE.

Don't Take Iron In Our Liquor Over Here, Magistrate Tells Irishman.

The janitor of an apartment house at St. Ann's Avenue and One Hundred and Fortieth Street looked out of the door yesterday morning and saw a man trying to eat the spikes off the iron fence in front. He called a policeman of the Alexander Avenue Station. The man was still munching at the spikes when he arrived.

"What's the matter with you?" asked the policeman.

"I'm weak and run down," replied the man. "I cannot sleep. I was told that iron was good for the blood, and so I thought I would try it. It is also good for the nerves; besides I am trying an experiment."

At the station house the prisoner said he was Dominick King of 344 West Broadway, the "King of the Iron Eaters." A little later he was arraigned in the Morrisania Court. The prisoner said he had been in this country about eight months, and was from the County Galway, Ireland.

"We don't take iron in our liquor over here," said the Magistrate, "whatever they do in the County Galway."

"Oh, yes, you do," responded the prisoner, producing from his pocket an advertisement of somebody's "beef, iron, and wine, good for blood and nerves."

Magistrate Mayo discharged him with the warning to eschew iron fences in future.

At the station house, when he was searched, a copy of a magazine was found in his pocket, with an article on "The Tensile Strength of Iron" marked in blue pencil. King said he was greatly interested in the subject, and was making an experiment at the time of his arrest.

MARRIED IN A HURRY TO OBLIGE MISS LOFTUS

ACTRESS WANTED A WEDDING

Supplied Flowers, a Justice, and Attendants on the Spot—Then Sailed Away Happy.

When the liner Philadelphia started for Southampton yesterday one of the happiest of all her passengers was Cecelia Loftus, the actress. Almost at the last hour Miss Loftus had brought about the marriage of two of her closest friends.

The victims of Miss Loftus's Cupid shafts were Oliver Herford, who writes verse and also edits a weekly paper, and Miss Margaret Regan, Ph. D., of Victoria College. They came to Miss Loftus's apartment on Friday afternoon to bid her "good-bye." She knew that they were engaged, but few others were aware that their relations were closer than their joint efforts in producing Dreamland, a humorous weekly paper, which started a fortnight ago, would imply. Miss Regan and Miss Loftus were schoolmates in a Yorkshire convent. Miss Regan first met Mr. Herford at a dinner given in Miss Loftus's honor by E. H. Sothern last Fall. She soon became their confidante.

At their parting call Miss Loftus expressed regret that her departure might prevent her from seeing their wedding. Then she implored them not to give her this disappointment, but to marry then and there. They were willing.

Miss Loftus stepped to the telephone and invited City Court Judge John Henry McCarthy to come and perform the ceremony; another call, to a tradesman, caused her rooms to be transformed into a floral bower in short order. Still another call brought Elwyn Barron, the dramatist, to be best man and Mrs. Elizabeth Henry, a chum of Miss Regan and Miss Loftus, to be a witness. These two, with Miss Loftus, were the only witnesses.

A wedding breakfast at the Hotel Breslin and a wedding supper at the Hotel Brevoort-Lafayette followed, and cable and telegraph messages began to go and come. All of the bride's relatives are in England. Most of Mr. Herford's relatives are there, too, and he has divided his time between that country, where he was born, and the United States. Mr. Herford has written "The Bashful Earthquake," "The Rubaiyat of a Persian Kitten," "A Child's Primer of Natural History," and is about to have published a book called "The Fairy Godmother-in-Law."

Mr. and Mrs. Herford went last evening to their Summer home, at Mamoroneck.

Run Special Horse and Carriage Train.

The Long Island Railroad will put on a "horse and carriage" train once a week on its Montauk Division for the benefit of Summer residents along the south shore. The train leaves Long Island City every Wednesday at 1 P. M. On most roads the practice is to carry horses in the regular horse cars, the carriages being shipped separately with the general run of freight. On the Long Island Road, however, this class of freight is so heavy that it was decided to put on the special.

To Close at 5 P. M. in Summer.

B. Altman & Co. announce that they will start their summer closing season June 3. They will close at 5 P. M. daily and at noon on Saturday.

30 YEARS' LEGAL WAR SETTLED AT LAST

Many of the Lawyers Concerned in It Died Long Ago.

OVER PARAN STEVENS ESTATE

Enough Testimony Taken to Fill an Encyclopaedia — Everybody Has Lost Track of Most of It.

Announcement was made yesterday that all of the litigation over the estate of Paran Stevens, which has occupied the attention of the courts for more than thirty years, has been settled satisfactorily to all of the litigants. Charles Donohue, the referee, who has been taking testimony with a view to having the fight over the Stevens millions brought to a close, has filed his report in the County Clerk's office. In it he recommends that the court approve the settlement agreed on. Within a few days the Supreme Court will confirm this report, and the long-drawn-out litigation will be ended.

The principal heirs are Mrs. Arthur Harry Paget (Mary Stevens) and Mrs. John L. Melcher, who was Miss Ellen S. Stevens. The latter by the terms of the settlement will give up one-eighth interest in the Hotel Victoria property, at Broadway and Fifth Avenue and Twenty-eighth Street, and will then be released from all claims against her.

Paran Stevens laid the foundations of his fortune in the hotel business in this city and in Boston. He increased it by judicious investments in real estate. When he died in 1872 his estate was valued at more than $10,000,000. His widow, Mrs. Marietta Stevens, died a few years after her husband.

Ever since Mr. Stevens's death the litigation over his estate has been going on in the courts in various forms. Some of the actions brought have been carried to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court and some have gone to the Court of Appeals. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been expended in lawyers' fees. Some of the lawyers who originally appeared in the fight are dead—died from old age, it was said yesterday.

One of the affidavits filed yesterday by a lawyer now interested in the suits practically admitted that there had been so much litigation over the estate that he was unable to keep track of it, and had been unable to tell just how many actions had been brought and who appeared as plaintiffs in the matter.

"I've been in a great many legal battles," said another of the lawyers interested, "but I never knew of any in which such a volume of testimony, briefs, points and printed arguments have appeared. Why the amount of material in the Stevens estate fight fills more printed books than would go to make up the Encyclopaedia Brittanica. It would take a man more than six months to read it all, and he wouldn't know all about it then. The cost of printing alone amounted to more money than would keep a man and his family in good style for the rest of their days."

But by Wednesday of this week, when the court will confirm the referee's report, the litigation over the Stevens estate will be over and done with.

WILLIAM ZIEGLER'S FUNERAL.

Services at Former Home Followed by Entombment at Woodlawn.

Special to The New York Times.

STAMFORD, Conn., May 27.—The funeral of William Ziegler was held at noon to-day at his Great Island estate. The service was conducted by the Rev. Louis French, rector of the Episcopal Church of Noroton, which the members of Mr. Ziegler's family attend while at Noroton.

There was no music and no honorary pall bearers were named. The body lay in a coffin of gun metal, finished in bronze. It was covered with orchids, smilax, and lilies of the valley.

During the services William Ziegler, Jr., the adopted son who, it is said, will inherit a large part of the estate, sat in an invalid's chair beside the widow.

One of Master Ziegler's closest friends a year or two ago was Meni Peary Wallace, an Eskimo boy who was adopted by William Wallace, then employed by Mr. Ziegler. The Eskimo was brought to this country by Lieut. Peary, with whom Mr. Wallace was associated. He is now living in the Bronx. Yesterday Master Ziegler received a letter of condolence from him.

Fifty friends accompanied the body to the Ziegler mausoleum in Woodlawn, where the entombment service was conducted by the Rev. Mr. French. The funeral special left Noroton at 2:30. It was composed of two private coaches and a baggage car.

BOERS AND BRITONS IN CONFLICT ONCE AGAIN

Waging Battle Twice a Day at Brighton Beach.

A PERMANENT JOYOUS FOURTH

Down at Brighton Beach, where in due time the ponies will go round and round, and not far from the place where the succulent roast beef sputters on the spit and the "hot-hot" of the frankfurter man is heard the whole day long and far into the night, the Boers and Britons are fighting o'er again the hard-fought battles of their late unpleasantness.

Twice a day the war wages warmly, and twice a day Gen. Cronje gives up his arms in token of submission after Paardeberg has been lost and won; twice a day, too, rain or shine, an understudy for de Wet makes his marvelous escape through a cordon of 50,000, more or less, British soldiers, while the multitude cheers, just as it will again cheer a few moments later when fickle fortune has transferred the good fortune of war to the other side. You know that the escape is marvelous, for the programme tells you so, and if your own eyes lead you to believe that there are less than 50,000 men—well—you have the programme before you to show how uncertain the evidence of the senses is apt to be.

But whether there are 5,000 men or 50,000, it's a good show, a big show, and one that is full of life and color and movement—the kind of show that makes the red blood tingle and sends the thrills of patriotic fervor up and down the spine. To be sure, the Stars and Stripes only wave triumphant after all the fighting is over—and that's a pity—but courage is courage, no matter what the colors on the standard, and one can applaud and rejoice at sight of battle-scarred veterans, even though they do come from lands across the sea.

Of them all Gen. Piet Cronje is of course the most interesting figure, and as he rides on the field sans uniform and clothed in an old well-worn blue suit, the short tails of his cutaway coat falling down on either side of the saddle, he is greeted with cheer upon cheer.

There are a few preliminaries before the warfare begins; short sorties by mounted troops, quick, brisk races between ugly little black Basutes mounted on ugly little ponies; a really picturesque sword exercise and musical drill by a company of lancers, and a not very exciting game, "The Melée of the Rose," which only serves to show that the Boers are serious folk, even in their pastimes.

Then the curtain rings up on the "scenes of broil and battle." Far as the eye can see stretch hills and valleys of painted canvas, while here and there on the rolling turf are seen the block houses which the Boers have reared for their defense. Overhead the blue sky—everywhere peace and quiet. Then a cloud of dust in the hazy farway, and four scouts gallop into view just as a bugle call is heard.

In a minute all is life and bustle in the burghers' camp. The reconnoitring party gallops up and the ping-ping of a rifle makes a sharp note in the general din. A man falls to the ground and his horse gallops on without him. Now all is confusion, the rattle of the Maxims begins, cannon boom, and the clatter of many hoofs is heard. Men drop from their horses, and the animals themselves fall to the ground. Then the smoke clears away and the Boers are seen standing triumphant over the guns they have captured. Thus ends the battle of Colenso.

But it is not all a Boers' holiday—this spectacle of war at Brighton Beach. The scene of Colenso, with fortune smiling on the heroes of the little Dutch Republic, is followed by the battle of Paardeberg, where after a hard hand-to-hand fight, the burning of the commissariat wagons, and the explosion of much ammunition, Gen. Cronje and the gallant defenders find themselves hemmed in, with no way out but surrender.

It is not an unpleasant way, this, to enjoy a conflict; not too exciting; not the least bit dangerous, and very, very noisy. It is, in fact, a sort of permanent joyous Fourth without the necessity of waiting to pull the leaves off your calendar.

"BOER WAR" AND RACING.

Fears of Horsemen Cause Agreement to Regulate Shooting.

Fears expressed by horsemen concerning the probable effects on the horses soon to race at the Brighton Beach track, on account of the rifle shooting and cannonading in the Boer War spectacle, have resulted in a conference between the managers of the spectacle and Christophr J. Fitz Gerald, representing the management of the Brighton Beach track, and an agreement which it is believed will reduce the bad effects of the firing to a minimum. Under this agreement it has been decided by the managers of the Boer War spectacle that the firing shall cease at the time when horses are at the post or actually racing at the Brighton Beach track, and a code of signals which will keep the directors of the show informed of the time when the shooting shall stop will be arranged.

DYING MAN'S WATCH GONE.

Also His Pin—Police Who Picked Him Up Under Investigation.

His diamond pin and gold watch were missing when Milton Brown, fifty-nine years old, a collector living at Perth Amboy, N. J., died in Bellevue Hospital on May 11, after being picked up in Forty-second Street, near the East River, suffering from a cerebral hemorrhage. All that his family has been able to find is a diamond ring and a book of receipts.

Chief Inspector Cortright has now notified Acting Capt. Naughton of the East Thirty-fifth Street station, to which Brown was carried, that that station "must be turned inside out" and the missing property found at all costs. There are detectives at work, and the Inspector himself is holding an investigation.

Brown was a thirty-third degree Mason and a civil war veteran. Inspector Cortright was his personal friend. Sergt. Brown was at the desk when Brown was taken there. He and Policeman Twomey, who found Brown, have been before the Inspector and have reported to him that Brown was carried from the station on a stretcher covered with a blanket with all his property on him.

The stretcher carriers at the hospital have been questioned by Dr. Brannan and will be called before Inspector Cortright next week.

ART SCHOOL OF THE Y. W. C. A.

Exhibit of Work by Young Women Engaged in Breadwinning.

The Young Women's Christian Association in East Fifteenth Street, near Fifth Avenue, is exhibiting the work of the art school managed by Miss Sophia Antoinette Walker. The classrooms are on the top floor, where the best products of the primary and the advanced classes are to be seen on walls and tables. The school appeals most to young women and girls who are earning their living. The morning and evening classes have been attended more than ever before, and the results are encouraging, for they offer many examples of working girls in certain lines of the trades who supplement their daily labor by studies in the line of their employment.

At this school girls are taken without preliminary examination, and during the first year in the morning classes follow a weekly curriculum of historic ornament, being made to copy in pen and ink and colors a serics of decorative designs in chronological order. Then they take up drawings from the cast and from memory, design, water color, geometric drawing and perspective, wood carving and modeling in clay. The teachers try to explain the relations these ornaments and decorations bear to each other, and they supplement class work by excursions to workshops, studios, and museums, striving to widen the horizon of each pupil and give her cultivation as well as manual training. Wood carving, superintended by Mr. Karl von Rydingsvard, is represented by boxes, bookracks, chests, and panels for a writing desk. In modeling from the clay there are copies of animal forms by Barye and Frémiet.

A specialty under Miss Helen Turner as instructress is costume drawing, which attracts young women employed by modistes. It is an evening class very well attended. A large case contains women's hats, designed and trimmed by pupils. One of these young women has gone abroad for the second time to bring back ideas and designs in sketches for her employer. Among the attendants of the evening class taught by Miss Walker is a bookkeeper who spends two evenings a week in woodcarving and shows panels having the interlaced work and figures seen in Norse originals. From the advanced morning class, drawing the costumed model, come sketches by the Misses Mary Bacon Jones, Agnes N. Lee, and de la Montaigne.

In water colors the best work is by Mrs. Reynolds, whose fruit and other still life show a strong sense of color. She is also exhibiting a carved chest and a well-designed stand for a lamp with Latin motto, which was shown recently at the Keramic Exhibition in the National Arts Club.

The scholarships this year have been awarded by a jury consisting of Messrs. Marshall Fry and Henry W. Belknap. In the general art class the first scholarship went to Miss Ida Foster for woodcarving, the second to the Misses Helen Fuchs for embroidery and Katherine Bittoklite for designs. In the Morning Classes a first-class scholarship is won by Miss Sylvia A. Williams, an honorable mention going to Miss Mimi Kohlmann. The Advanced Scholarship was taken by Mrs. Grace Reynolds, an honorable mention going to Miss Agnes N. Lee. In the Costume Class (evening classes) a scholarship has fallen to Miss Marie Behrendt; honorable mentions are given to the Misses Marguerite Newmann and Helen Hall.

Mention is due Miss Parfitt for vase with triple elephant heads, to Miss Beebe for sundial, and to the Misses Squire, Newell, and Greene for decorative inkstands. The principle governing this school is to awaken the interest of the pupils by rather varied work at first, allowing them in the second year to concentrate their energies on whatever seems to be their best line of endeavor.

KIDNAPPED A CHILD.

But the Ship Quartermaster Out for a Time Didn't Remember It.

Louis Atkinson, four years old, who had been missing since Friday afternoon from his home, at 217 Bloomfield Street, Hoboken, was restored to his parents yesterday afternoon by Policeman Wallace of the Second Precinct. The child went out to play with some children in front of his home, but when his mother went to call him she could not find him.

Some of the children told her that a man had stopped and talked with the boy for a time, and the two had then walked away, hand in hand. The mother became greatly alarmed and ran to the police station. The police failed to discover any trace of the child or the mysterious man with whom he had gone away. The search was kept up all night.

Policeman Wallace was on post at noon yesterday when a man carrying a sleeping boy in his arms walked up to him and said that he would like to find where the child belonged. The man said he was Peter Epsom of 65 Grand Street, and that he went out for a good time Friday. He awoke yesterday morning in a room in the Dry Dock Hotel, in Fourteenth Street, and found alongside of him in bed the boy he was then carrying in his arms. How he came to have the child he said he had not the faintest recollection. He added that he was very fond of children. Epsom was later arraigned before Recorder Stanton, and admitted that he had been drinking. He is a quartermaster on a Morgan Line steamship. The Recorder told him he believed his statement, but that he must come to court to-morrow. An investigation will be made in the meantime.

AFTER HAIGHT & FREESE.

Connecticut Creditors Get Receiver Named, Closing State Offices.

HARTFORD, Conn., May 27.—Creditors of the Haight and Freese Company in this city to-day obtained the appointment of a temporary receiver by Judge Case of the Superior Court. William Waldo Hyde was named to serve for the entire State.

Deputy Sheriffs immediately took steps to close the offices in New Haven, Bridgeport, and New London and to serve notice on banks there not to pay out any funds belonging to the company. James D. Colt, who is receiver of the company in Boston, was named as ancillary in Connecticut. Hearing was set for June 5.

HIS MAGNET DOUBLED MONEY.

"Prof." Parkhurst Then Got $610 from Woman and Left.

Special to The New York Times.

LOWELL, Mass., May 27.—A clairvoyant known to the public as "Prof." Parkhurst has dropped out of sight after doing a thriving business among the women of Lowell, and complaint has been made to the police that he has illegally obtained $610 from a dressmaker, whose home is about two minutes' walk from the Lowell Court House.

The scheme was to "magnetize" the money which the women brought and return it doubled in amount. The com- [illegible] that he doubled [illegible] med it; then he

SAYS WINDOW GARDENS ARE NOT UNLAWFUL

Mrs. Hall Points Out, However, That They Must Be Secured.

POLICE MISTAKE ORDINANCE

Displays of Flowering Plants Permissible If Boxes or Pots Are Safely Fastened to Sills.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In this morning's TIMES, on the editorial page, "Upper West Side" writes a letter on the subject of "Trouble Over Window Plants."

As Chairman of the Committee on "Flowers, Vines and Area Planting" of the Municipal Art Society of New York, I am interested in the letter written by "Upper West Side."

This Spring our committee has taken particular pains to foster the love of window box gardens by giving out free packages of flower seeds to hundreds and hundreds of families in various parts of the city, particularly in the tenement districts, urging them to use the seeds for window boxes.

On every occasion of the distributing of the seeds, however, especial pains have been taken when addressing the persons to read most carefully to them the law of the city pertaining to articles on all window sills of New York City. For the benefit of any of the readers of THE TIMES interested in the subject, and unacquainted with this law, I quote it verbatim as it came to me from the Municipal authorities upon application:

IN THE BOARD OF ALDERMEN.

Section 671—It shall not be lawful for any person to place or keep on any windowsill, railing, or balcony, top of porch, or any other projection from any house or other building in the City of New York, any earthen flowerpots, wooden box, or other article or thing whatever for the cultivation or retention of flowers, shrubs, vines, or any other article or thing whatever, unless every such flower pot, box, or other article is securely and firmly fastened or protected by iron railings, so fastened as to render it impossible for any such pot, box, or other article to fall into the street, under a penalty of $10 for every offense, to be recovered in the manner now specified by law for the collection of fines imposed for the violation of ordinances of the corporation.

Adopted by the Board of Aldermen March 9, 1897.

Approved by the Mayor March 15, 1897.

In case any later and more stringent laws upon this subject have been enacted regarding front or side windows, I am not aware of them, and would esteem it a favor to be informed.

Of course, every one is supposed to know that most rigid laws exist as to fire escapes, and for most excellent and necessary reasons, and besides frequently quoting the above law I am always careful to mention the fire escape law whenever window boxes are discussed. If, however, a box is firmly fastened to the casement of a front or side window, I doubt if there is any existing law to forbid its use, any more than forbidding such an incumbrance as an awning or a shutter—the shutter often becomes loosened from its moorings. Plant pots are not easily fastened in, save by railings in front of them, but the best mode I have yet discovered of securing a box to the building is by means of long steel hooks in the box and staples in the window casement. These can be purchased at any hardware store for 5 cents apiece, and if each box has four hooks upon it, two at the top of the box and two at the bottom, at the corners, I am certain that it would never become loosened in any kind of a windstorm.

The advantage of hooks and staples is that when the windows are to be washed the box can be unhooked and placed indoors till the windows are cleaned, and then afterward it can again be placed on the sill and hooked to the casement. I have had a frame constructed as a model, for committee uses, simply to hold plant pots, and comply with the above law. This frame is not for sale by the Municipal Art Society, as we do not handle for sale any materials, but we would be very willing to have any one see the model for individual use.

Philadelphia and a number of foreign cities use window boxes even on the municipal buildings, such as Post Offices, &c., and while New Yorkers may not wish them on their office buildings, for various reasons, it does seem a pity to deprive citizens of the pleasure of adorning their individual apartments and homes with window gardens when there is no law of the city to prevent such nature adornment.

If policemen do not thoroughly understand the above law, which has been quoted, and explain that if articles are securely fastened they may remain, the movement of having window gardens in this city will of necessity have a great setback. Cleveland, Ohio, has for years had countless window gardens, as well as other cities, and such cities as Paris and Washington are admired by tourists largely on account of the constant sight of growing things. The trees of this city are few and far between, and the parks at great distances from many homes, and if in the Spring and Summer citizens of New York try to bring a touch of nature to their own homes, it is too bad to hinder them from doing so simply because policemen do not fully explain the law on the subject.

A policeman visited this block on One Hundred and Third Street and Central Park West on Wednesday last and made the same sweeping statement as "Upper West Side" stated in his letter, consequently the whole block soon looked as dreary as in Winter. One apartment escaped, where the family was absent for the afternoon and where two boxes were fastened to the casement. So far this family has not removed its boxes, because it felt that it was complying with the law.

Any assistance THE NEW YORK TIMES can give the citizens of New York toward keeping their window gardens will be most thoroughly appreciated. I am certain, by thousands of New Yorkers who are obliged to spend the Summer months in this hot and dusty city and who long for a little touch of green upon their window sills.

IRENE G. HALL, Chairman Committee on Flowers, Vines, and Area Planting, Municipal Art Society.

RACIAL PURITY OF THE JEW.

Development of the American Type of Hebrew.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

An interesting paper was recently read by Dr. Maurice Fishberg before the Anthropological Society in New York which has been widely reprinted and may therefore do much scientific mischief if allowed to pass unchallenged. Certain it is that it needs a wider discussion and the production of more evidence in proof than the Doctor has given to have his facts accepted. Heretofore the world has accepted a theory in direct opposition to his conclusions.

Indeed, is it not very apparent that the gentleman is talking very great nonsense when he tries to prove that "the Jews are an impure race as to their origin, from the facts of their eye and hair coloring and the assimilation of feature types to the natives of the country in which they now live or have lived for some time"? Is it not apparent to the most ordinary observer that in two or three generations the children of the German, Polish, and Russian Jews, who emigrated here have, without any foreign admixture of blood whatever, not only changed in coloring, but even in type of physiognomy, and that there are thousands upon thousands of young men and women, and especially children, to-day in the United States who look like their full-blooded Christian American neighbors, and would never be taken for Jews or Semites anywhere?

Climatic conditions, food, athletics, and a hundred subtle influences have combined to modify and change the type of the race. Certainly the climatic conditions must be largely responsible for eye and hair coloring, at least. Northern Europeans are apt to be blond, Southern Europeans brunette, irrespective of race affiliations, and frequently of race origin, in the past.

Our climate, too, must in course of time (more or less short) have its natural and inevitable way. Many processes must be at work under the new environment. Education and mode of life, changes of occupation, physical and mental freedom, the removal of mental fear and dread as to expatriation or cruelty, the security of the home, all these must contribute to and be responsible for varying physical measurements and other inexplicable and subtle, but constantly increasing and very notable, effects upon a race being transplanted to and acclimated to a new country on another continent and under new conditions.

It is in this way that the distinctly American type has been evolved from an admixture of all races under the sun—a type recognizable, not by religion, not by sects or creeds, but bearing the distinct label "American."

And were there no blond types in Asia, in Palestine, and even in Egypt, of the Jews?

And of the 2,000 measurements he says he made, had he all the data and antecedents? And was he sure that the majority of those he measured were not too closely alike in origin from some particular country or section of country?

Then, too, with all the persecution and hatred in the past, of the Jews on the one hand, and the tenacity of Jews to their faith on the other, was the "admixture" he so glibly talks about so easy or so welcome on either side? In fact, tolerated to any appreciable extent? Here and there, of course, there were numerous instances of intermarriage, and there was proselytism. But was there enough of this to change the type? And was the type changed at all until recently to any great extent? Was not the Jew recognizable easily anywhere?

Then, again, not only were they tenacious of their race purity and were anathemas, maranthas, hurled at those contracting alien alliances, but even within their own pale there were, in bygone times, strong racial customs, such as marriages between the sons and daughters of the tribes of the Kohanim or priesthood and Levites, in preference to selections of these racial aristocrats from the general mass of people.

I am not a learned person in matters of anthropology, but one does not need to be, it seems to me, to refute Dr. Fishberg's easy assumptions, at least until they are more definitely proved. The outside world is not, on the whole, too greatly informed as to the history of the Jewish race in its own social relation and its social relations with other races, but is always deeply interested in the history of the "chosen people," and will, therefore, easily listen to one it takes for learned on the subject, who is within the pale himself. But the veriest tyro knows the Jews resisted to the death all efforts of conversion, and that the rest of the world hated and hounded them and did not intermix with them out of love.

I think it is easier far to prove the Jews are a pure race than that they are not. The evidence for such an assertion, involving the purity of the Hebrew race to-day, their direct descent from those of the exodus from Egypt, must be far more overwhelming and far more convincing than any the Doctor has so plausibly offered.

DETECTIVE DODGED AN AXE.

Man Supposed to Know About McManus Murder Resisted Arrest.

When Inspector Schmittberger and Capt. McDermott of the Fifth Street Station set their detectives yesterday to look for the murderer of "Eat 'Em Up Jack" McManus, they learned that August Metz of 83 Bayard Street, who was seen in the neighborhood where McManus was assaulted on Thursday night, and who is well known to the police, had been missing lately from his usual haunts.

They decided that Metz knew something about the attack on McManus, and yesterday afternoon they went to find him. He was at home, in a flat on the second floor rear.

When he failed to respond to repeated knocks the detectives broke in the door. Metz, with an axe in his hands, faced them in a corner of the room. Detective Ross advanced to grasp him, and Metz, according to the detective, struck at him with the axe. Ross dodged, and, with Detectives Stapleton and Gilday, closed on Metz. The prisoner was soon thoroughly subdued. He was taken to the Eldridge Street Station and will be arraigned in Essex Market Court as a "suspicious person" this morning.

NEW SCHOOL RECORDS AT CHAMPIONSHIPS

CLINTON WON POINT TROPHY

Carnival of Sports Held on Columbia Oval by Public School Athletic League, Lasting Entire Day.

Records were broken in five events yesterday by the boy athletes competing in the High School championships of the Public School Athletic League, and two in the elementary events. It was the second outdoor meeting of the big organization, and it was notable in many ways, both for the keenness of the competitions on the track of Columbia Oval, William's Bridge, and because of the unusual marks established. Several approximate the records of the best American amateurs of not so many years ago.

The new records by the High School boys include H. Hirschman's 12-pound shot put of 44 feet ½ inch. The Erasmus Hall High School jumper, E. B. Hutchings, cleared 21 feet in the running broad jump. An even foot better than the old record.

George McNulty, Erasmus Hall, sprinted the 220 yards for juniors in 0:23 3-5, which is nearly two seconds better than the old-time record. Another Erasmus Hall boy, H. Rogers, cleared 9 feet 9 inches in the pole vault, three inches higher than the former mark. Hoffman of Commerce also put on a new mark for the high jump. He won the event at 5 feet 6 inches.

De Witt Clinton's athletes easily won the point honors, with a total of 34; Commerce second, with 30, and Boys' High and Erasmus tied at 29.

The younger boys held the big track early in the morning, but there were so many of them that it was nearly 2 o'clock in the afternoon before they finished. Many of the High School athletes were on hand to watch them and cheer them on. R. J. Peterkin made the remarkable running high jump for a boy of 5 feet 1 inch. He competed in the senior elementary class from School No. 44, Brooklyn. Peterkin's schoolmate, Curtis Simpson, also created a new record in the junior running broad jump. He was a small chap, but he made a leap of 5 feet 11 inches.

Altogether the events provided splendid sport, and the figures denote the wonderful progress of the American schoolboy in the field of athletics. The summary:

HIGH SCHOOL CHAMPIONSHIPS.

One-Mile Run.—Won by H. Boden, Commerce; R. Morrell, De Witt Clinton, second; David Mackay, Bryant, third; M. Stoes, De Witt Clinton, fourth. Time—5:02 4-5.

Putting 12-Pound Shot.—Won by H. Hirshman, Commerce, with 44 feet ½ inch; Edward Gluchman, College of the City of New York, (sub.-freshman.) with 40 feet 10 inches, second; C. Newman, De Witt Clinton, with 39 feet, third; O. Schwind, Morris, with 36 feet 11 inches, fourth.

100-Yard Dash, Junior.—Won by George McNulty, Erasmus Hall; A. Powell, Boys' High, second; E. Stebbins, Manual Training, third; M. Schroeder, De Witt Clinton, fourth. Time—0:10 3-5.

NEW ROCHELLE YACHTS RACE.

Hanan's Nautilus Wins New York Yacht Club One-Design Contest.

The regatta of the New Rochelle Yacht Club, which opened the racing season on Echo Bay yesterday, developed an excellence that surpassed the expectation of even its promoters. The number of entries exceeded every one's anticipation, and the contests were mostly close and interesting.

The New York Yacht Club, Larchmont, Indian Harbor, Hempstead Harbor, Horseshoe Harbor, Atlantic, and New Rochelle Clubs had entries in the various events. Interest centred principally in the one-design 30-foot class of the New York Yacht Club. Nine of the club's eighteen new Herreshoff boats competed, seven finishing after all had made one round of the course. The entire distance was seventeen miles, a reach, a run, and a beat over an 8½-mile triangle.

First honors went to A. G. Hanan's Nautilus, which went over the line first and led from start to finish.

In the Larchmont's 21-foot sloop class J. H. Esser's Houri led all the way and finished the 8½-mile course three minutes ahead of P. M. Stumo's Vaquero, which beat L. G. Spence's Dorothy 14 seconds after a pretty race.

AUTOS FOR ORPHANS.

Alfred Vanderbilt and Col. Astor Tender Cars for Dreamland Trip.

Alfred G. Vanderbilt and Col. John Jacob Astor have offered the use of their large touring French automobiles to the committee of the New York Motor Club in charge of the arrangements for Orphans' Day, June 7. A large number of additional cars were promised last week for use on that day, but nearly one hundred motor vehicles are still needed to accommodate the number of orphans that will be carried to Coney Island for a grand day's outing. Sir Thomas Dewar has notified Frederick Glassup of the Automobile Club of America to furnish all the food needed by the children for this holiday excursion.

It is expected that about 1,000 orphans will be the guests of the New York Motor Club on June 7. They will be taken from sixteen institutions, as follows:

Hebrew Sheltering Guardian Society, Committee of Dependent Children, House of St. Giles the Cripple, Leake & Watts Orphans' Home, Dominican Convent of Our Lady of the Rosary, Institution of Mercy, Catrach Home for Crippled Children, St. Joseph's Asylum, Hospital for Crippled and Ruptured, United Hebrew Charities of New York, Victor Lodworth's Home, Children's Aid Society, Randall's Island Orphans' Band, Mission of the Friend of Children, Howard Mission, and Golden Hour House.

The children will be taken to Dreamland, Coney Island, and all of its wonders and attractions will be open free for their enjoyment. Frank C. Bostock will give a special performance of his trained animals. A special exhibition has been arranged of the spectacle "Fighting the Flames." Chief Brennan, a veteran of the New York Fire Department, assisted by a corps of fire fighters, will demonstrate the rapid work of a city fire department in extinguishing a fire in a big building and in rescuing the inmates.

FAST TENNIS BY EXPERTS.

Grant and Bryan Reach Semi-Finals in Tourney on New York Courts.

Rapid progress was made in the open singles yesterday in the tournament of the New York Lawn Tennis Club, held on its courts, Manhattan Avenue and One Hundred and Twenty-third Street. Two of the competitors, Wylie C. Grant and Robert T. Bryan, won their brackets in the semi-final round before play was discontinued for the day.

Thirty-eight players, representing many of the leading clubs in the Metropolitan district, and several from other cities, drew for places in the singles. The committee in charge of the meeting decided that with an entry list of this size it was necessary to record defaults where the men were not on hand to compete, and this explains the number of defaults in the opening round. Twenty pairs are entered for the Manhattan Championship doubles which will begin to-morrow.

Frederick G. Anderson, the expert of the Kings County Lawn Tennis Club, furnished the best performances of the day in the first round. In this match Dimon E. Roberts of the New York Lawn Tennis Club was very fast in the opening set. He outvolleyed Anderson in the rallies at the net, taking the set at 6—4. Anderson worked his passing strokes with good effect in the second and third sets, both of which he won by easy scores.

The Columbia University expert, Campbell, experienced some difficulty with the accurate passing and place shots of his opponent, N. G. Johnson, but finally won by two sets to one. Summary:

CORNELL EIGHT BEATS HARVARD ON CHARLES

Ithacans Finish Six and a Half Lengths Ahead of Crimson.

LEADS RACE FROM THE START

Cambridge Boat Shows Lack of Finish, While Cornell Is in Splendid Form.

BOSTON, May 27.—Cornell University gave a notable exhibition of the type of rowing which she has practiced so successfully at the Poughkeepsie races in past years, when, late this afternoon, her 'Varsity oarsmen defeated the Harvard University eight-oared crew on the Charles River by six and a half lengths. The crimson oarsmen rowed a plucky race, but they could do little in competing with the Ithaca students, who pulled over the course of one and seven-eighths miles with a stroke and form which operated as a unit, and which shot their shell forward after the first eighth of a mile. The official time for the race was: Cornell, 10 minutes 9 1-5 seconds, and Harvard, 10 minutes 31 seconds.

As in her recent races with Yale on the Thames, the Harvard crew got the better start, and headed the visitors by a quarter of a length almost immediately. Harvard pulled thirty-eight strokes to the minute and Cornell about thirty-six. Cornell splashed at the start, but at the eighth-of-a-mile mark she reduced her stroke, caught up with Harvard, and in a few moments her bow gradually pushed ahead of the tip of the Crimson shell. From that time the race was Cornell's.

As the shells passed under Harvard Bridge, half way to the finish, Harvard was two lengths behind. Chase, the Harvard coxswain, gave the word to spurt, but the answering effort of the men did not bring them any nearer to the Cornell shell.

At the mile flag Cornell was four lengths to the good. At this point the wind was blowing hard, and to escape its force the Cornell coxswain steered his boat nearer to the Boston sea wall, at the risk of lengthening the course for her. Then she pulled straight for the finish flag, and, increasing her gain, sped to the line in splendid form, and won the race amid the cheers from thousands of throats and the screeching whistles of a hundred pleasure craft grouped about, six and a half lengths in front of the crew from Cambridge. Summary:

CORNELL MAKES NEW RECORD

PHILADELPHIA, May 27.—Distancing their competitors the eight-oared crew of the Vesper Boat Club easily won the senior shell race today at the American Association regatta, held on the Schuylkill River course. Their time was 6 minutes and 43 4-5 seconds for the distance, with the crew of the University of Pennsylvania nearly two lengths behind at the finish.

It was the third annual regatta of the American Rowing Association, and record time was made in the various races. In the junior college eight-oared event the Cornell crew took first honors and broke the record for the course by 2 seconds. The course is the same length as the English Henley—1 mile and 550 yards. Cornell's time was 6 minutes and 34 seconds. The Yale Freshmen were second and the University of Pennsylvania junior crew was third.

Much of the interest in the regatta was centred in the Vesper Club's eight, which is to row at the English Henley. The University of Pennsylvania crew, past and present, was the only entry against the Vespers, and latter held them all the way down the course. In the race for first centipede of four sculls, Pennsylvania Boat Club finished first and Philadelphia Boat Club second. The latter crew protested that it was fouled by Pennsylvania. The referee ordered the race rowed over, but Pennsylvania refused to comply, and the race was awarded to Philadelphia. The summary:

Senior Eight-Oared Shells.—Won by Vesper Boat Club; second, University of Pennsylvania. Time—6:43 4-5.

Four-Oared Shells, without Coxswain.—Won by Philadelphia Barge Club; second, Harvard University; third, Vesper Boat Club; fourth, Union Boat Club, Boston. Time—7:26.

Eight-Oared Junior College Crews.—Won by Cornell; second, Yale; third, University of Pennsylvania. Time—6:34.

Second Eight-Oared Shells.—Won by Harvard freshmen; second, University of Pennsylvania; third, West Philadelphia Boat Club. Time—6:40.

Four-Oared Shells.—Won by Seawanhaka Boat Club, New York; second, University of Pennsylvania; third, Ariel Boat Club, Baltimore. Time—7:12.

CORNELL VICTORY-MAD.

Students Parade, Celebrating Four Athletic Triumphs.

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, N. Y., May 27.—Cornell's four victories, two on the water, one in baseball, and first place in the intercollegiate track meet today, have set the 3,000 Cornell students victory-mad to-night. All of the town's Fourth of July supply of fireworks was consumed before 10 o'clock.

The students marched the streets carrying torches which they set on fire when the red light ran out. Not content with parading the streets, they entered the stores of the town, and without destroying any property, filled through many of them. Old residents who have been in Ithaca since before the founding of the university say that never was there such a celebration of a Cornell victory.

English Cricketers to Play Here.

In addition to the cricket match which the Metropolitan District League has arranged with the Hamilton Club of Bermuda, for June 17 and 19, it has completed arrangements for the Marylebone Cricket Club of London, to play a game in New York on Aug. 4 and 5.

Lord Harris, an old-time friend of American cricketers, is responsible for the visit of the team to America. The eleven will be under the captaincy of E. W. Mann, who is the Captain and manager of Kent County, [illegible] expected.

MEADOW BROOK POLO WON BY GREAT NECK

ROCKAWAY IN POOR FORM

Weaker Players Show Superior Team Work and Outclass Stronger Opponents in First Half of Game.

Great Neck met the Rockaway polo team yesterday at the Meadow Brook Hunt Club, near Westbury, L. I., and, although weaker by seven goals in handicap rating, won the match by the creditable score of 10 goals to 7. It was the first of three competitions for the Meadow Brook Cups, open to teams without handicap limitations, and while Rockaway disappointed its adherents in failing to make up the handicap allowance, the game was full of snap from start to finish, and held the attention of the largest crowd that has gathered around the Meadow Brook field this season.

John E. Cowdin, one of Rockaway's entrants and an eight handicap man, made his first appearance of the year. He did well, but showed lack of practice. Just as he was warming up to the game, in the third period, he received a bad cut from a mallet over his left eye. The accident occurred during a hot fight for the ball around the Rockaway goal posts, and amid the mass of flying mallets and prancing horses it was fortunate that more serious injuries were not inflicted.

Mr. Cowdin, however, received a pretty hard blow for it threw him from his saddle and his riderless pony, evidently anxious to get as far away as possible from the excitement of polo, started off on a wild run toward Hempstead. This is something unusual, for so well are the polo ponies trained that it is seldom one attempts to go much beyond the limits of the field. A groom was hastily mounted on one of the ponies on the side lines and after a run of three miles, the runaway was captured. Mr. Cowdin's injury was hastily patched up and after considerable delay he resumed play and made a goal in the third period and another in the final period.

CHRYSTIE WINS AUTO RACE.

Chicago Club Beaten in First Heat for Dr. Thomas Cup.

CHICAGO, May 27.—Walter Chrystie, representing the Automobile Club of America, won the first heat to-day in the initial competition for the inter-club trophy given by Dr. Havell E. Thomas. The cup is to be a challenge trophy and is open to competition only to teams from the Automobile Club of America in New York and the Chicago Automobile Club. The contest was the leading attraction in the three-day meet that began to-day on the Harlem race track. The second heat will be run off on Monday, and the third heat, if necessary, on Tuesday. Each heat is a five-mile race. Chrystie drove his 60-horse power car, and he was opposed by Carl Fisher in a 50-horse power car representing the Chicago Club. Fisher got a lead of a length at the start and increased it to five lengths at the first mile. Chrystie pulled up even before the close of the fourth mile, and the last mile resulted in one of the most exciting automobile races ever seen in Chicago, Chrystie finally winning by a length in the time of 5:10.

CANDLING'S STEEPLECHASE

Favorites Were Beaten in Four Races Before a Fair Crowd at the Gravesend Track.

The first Saturday of racing under the new conditions of higher prices for admission fees and a "free" betting ring attracted an attendance to Gravesend yesterday that fairly well filled the grand stand inclosure and packed the field stand and brought the total of receipts from the gate up to a figure that gratified and perhaps surprised the track owners. Though a crowd of about 12,000 visitors witnessed the racing, the field, at $1 for admission, held twice as many persons as did the grand stand, at the new prices of $3 for men and $1.50 for women. Miss Alice Roosevelt was a guest in one of the club boxes.

The results were more than ordinarily disastrous to the betting ring, as, though four of six favorites were beaten, all winners were well backed, three separate "good things" being successful at prices which took away all margin of profit by the ring on the defeats of the favorites. Candling, backed from 12 to 1 down to 9 to 1, Klingsor backed from 8 to 1 down to 9 to 2, and Kehailan, backed from 8 to 1 down to 5 to 1, were responsible for most of the ring's losses, while the bookmakers also were called on to do much paying when Cairngorm and Hooray, the two winning favorites, got to the finishing post first.

Cairngorm's race was the best of the day, the Paget stable's colt earning his victory after a splendidly fought race with the Oneck stable's filly Kiamesha, Cairngorm getting to the front in the very last jump and winning by a nose. The race, the fourth on the card, was for the chief of the two stakes decided, the Preakness, at one mile and seventy yards, for three-year-olds, for which eleven horses ran. Cairngorm always being the public choice. Von Tromp, Waterlight, Coy Maid, Glenecho, and Kiamesha also were heavily backed. Cairngorm led away from the starting post, with Bohemia and Kiamesha after him, and disputing the lead from the first jump the three raced in close order around the first turn and into the back stretch, with the remainder of the field well up. In the back stretch Bohemia showed first, and lasted in the lead to the bend into the stretch, where Kiamesha moved forward and took command. On the stretch Cairngorm made another effort after Kiamesha, and closed on the filly steadily, Kiamesha having her head in front a half dozen yards from the winning post, and fighting resolutely under the whip to keep it there. Cairngorm's last effort brought him up, however, and he was declared the winner, though there would have been no dispute by the crowd had the filly been placed first, so close was the race.

One other stake event run was the Kensington Steeplechase Handicap, over the short course, two miles through the field, with nine runners, of which the clever old jumper Lavator was the post favorite, with Jim Newman and Flying Virginian the two next best backed horses. Flying Virginian practically was left at the post and then fell early in the race, while Lavator led away, leading only for a few strides, however, after which Bonfire took command. Bonfire set the pace well into the second round of the field, Lavator and Jim Newman then passing him, and racing together into the middle of the back side of the track, where Lavator, under a bungling effort at the middle jump, fell while leading, Jim Newman then showing first, well off before all the others. In the last half mile, Candling, admirably ridden by Veitch, closed on the leader, and, taking the last jump just behind Jim Newman, outran that horse on the flat and won easily by six lengths. Finnegan, who rode Lavator, and Stone, who rode Flying Virginian, were stunned and shaken up by their falls, but neither was seriously hurt. Summary:

HILDRETH GETS A LICENSE.

Official announcement was made at the Brooklyn Jockey Club's Gravesend track yesterday that the Stewards of The Jockey Club had granted to Samuel C. Hildreth a license to train horses. Hildreth was at the race track and was congratulated by a great number of his friends among the horsemen.

The action of the Stewards in effect amounted to the reinstatement of Hildreth, who for nearly five years, or since the Fall of 1900, has been barred from the right to train horses on tracks under the jurisdiction of The Jockey Club. In the interim Hildreth has raced exclusively in the West, where he was permitted to train, as the withholding of his license in the East did not constitute ruling off, but was simply local in effect. Hildreth trained horses of his own and the division of the stable of E. E. Smathers which raced on the Western tracks. Mr. Smathers in the meantime made repeated efforts to secure the restoration of Hildreth to the privileges of the New York turf, but until very recently without avail.

Hildreth's connection with Mr. Smathers has continued since Mr. Smathers bought from Hildreth the noted race horse McChesney, in 1902. Hildreth training the horse in the West, and in 1903 bringing McChesney to New York for the match which was made, but which was never run, between McChesney and Waterboy. McChesney went lame in his preparation for the match race, and the contest fell through. The action of the Stewards in granting the license will permit Hildreth to take charge of the Smathers horses at once and succeed John Low in the management of the establishment.

Hildreth's license was revoked by the Stewards at the Morris Park Autumn meeting of 1900, as a disciplinary measure, after Hildreth, following a controversy with J. E. Madden, attacked Madden. The quarrel was said to be due to the suspicion on Hildreth's part that Madden had been instrumental in causing a breach between Hildreth and the late William C. Whitney, for whom Hildreth trained in the earlier part of the season.

EAST AND WEST TO MEET.

College Men Arrange for Contest Between Championships' Winners.

The East and West will meet on the cinder path next year for the first time in the history of college athletics, and a contest is promised in consequence that should surpass in interest and excellence any previously held on the track and field. Negotiations looking to this end have been under way for nearly a year between the men prominent in control of the Western Intercollegiate Association and Intercollegiate Association of America. The meet will be held on June 12 next year. Whether Chicago or New York will be chosen for the games has not yet been determined, but it will probably be held East, going West the succeeding year, and alternating thereafter.

First, second, and third men, winners in the championship events of the two associations, will compete, and points apportioned for three places on the basis of five, two, and one. The events will include the thirteen now on the programme of the Eastern Intercollegiate Association, the discus throw contested in the West being dropped.

CORNELL ATHLETES WIN THE INTERCOLLEGIATES

Yale Loses Through Her Failures in Field and Distance Events.

PARSONS MAKES NEW RECORD

Surprising Reversals in Many Events and Excellence of Smaller Colleges Decide Games.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 27.—Cornell sprung a surprise on the college world to-day by winning the intercollegiate championship meet on Franklin Field by her general excellence on track and field. In but a single instance did her men fail to do all that was expected of them and more.

Cornell's victory was due to the splendid work of her weight men more than anything else. Porter won the shot put with 45 feet ½ inch, while Cook threw 146 feet 11 inches in the hammer, though beaten by Van Duyne. Both surpassed themselves. Porter was tied for second in the high jump and Jackson and Phillips tied for the two places in the vault. These aggregated 17 points and were the backbone of Cornell's score. Munson of course won the mile for her, while Vonnegut, Townsend, Willgoose, Magoffin, and Carpenter brought up her total in the other track events.

Yale's defeat in the manner in which it was accomplished amazed every one. She took four firsts with Parsons in the half mile, Dray in the pole vault, Hall in the two mile, and Marshall in the high jump. The latter was a gift through Moffett's failure. All her other men expected to score in nearly every event fell down, and most of them ran unplaced. Burnap of Yale, picked to win by many, got third; Shevlin, believed to be a sure first, was third. Hill was beaten by Munson of Cornell and White of Amherst, a dark horse in the mile, and got third. The dashes and hurdles yielded only one point, to Cates. Knox took a point in the broad and Gilbert in the pole vault. This totaled 29 points, 1½ points behind Cornell's aggregate.

Harvard's position was due to the fine work of Schick in winning both sprints. Dives second in the quarter, Dodge third in the furlong, Schoenfus second in the shot, and Crane tied for second in the high jump were the only other points she got.

The excellent work of Hyman saved Pennsylvania from being totally eclipsed. He won the quarter handily in 0:49 2-5 and took second to Schick in a close finish in the 220-yard dash. Pennsylvania's other points were scored by Amsler, who was first in the high hurdle and second in the low, Whitman, who was fourth in the 220-yard dash, and Boyd, who was fourth in the shot-put.

Parsons was the only man to break a record. The wonderful Yale runner clipped 4-5 of a second from the old mark —1:56 4-5. He finished with plenty of speed to spare apparently, and many regretted that the pace was not faster so that he might have made a new world's record.

The summaries follow:

100-Yard Dash.—First Semi-Final Heat—Won by Schick, Harvard; Read, Amherst, second. Time—0:10 1-5.

Second Semi-Final Heat—Won by Roulon-Miller, Princeton; Knakal, Columbia, second. Time—0:10.

ECCENTRIC STEAM AUTO.

Accident Narrowly Averted at Empire City Track—Vaughan's Trial.

Joe Nelson, driving his freak steam machine popularly known as the "Lightning Bug," narrowly escaped a bad accident yesterday on the Empire City track, near Yonkers, where he was practicing for the big automobile meet there on Decoration Day. In making the turn at a high rate of speed just before coming into the home stretch, the machine, for no obvious reason, suddenly swerved from its course, and to the amazement of the little group of watchers, turned completely around twice without leaving the track. On the second turn, the car ran over toward the railing bordering the track and ripped off a couple of fence rails.

Nelson then stopped the car, which escaped damage except a slight injury to the steering gear. Nelson was totally unable to account for this eccentric behavior of his car, but he still has great faith in its ability to do fast work, and says he will not be deterred from driving the car on Tuesday. This is the car that won the Dewar Cup for the one-mile international championship at Ormond last Winter, the car then belonging to Louis Ross of Boston.

The other feature of automobile interest was a trial run by Guy Vaughan in the afternoon and evening. Vaughan is to start at 2 o'clock to-morrow afternoon in an effort to break the one-thousand-mile non-stop record of 23 hours 50 minutes, made by Charles Wridgway on May 6.

SEELEY IS CHAMPION IN METROPOLITAN GOLF

MANY PLAYERS IN HANDICAP

Robbins, Morrow, and Foot Win the Lesser Cups in Local Tournament at Fox Hills.

Charles H. Seeley won the metropolitan golf championship yesterday, after a hard-fought thirty-six-hole round on the Fox Hills Club links, Staten Island, defeating Archibald Graham by 1 up. It is the closest finish that has ever been recorded in the seven years of the local championship. Seeley comes from the Wee Burn Club, Connecticut, while Graham enters from the North Jersey Club, Paterson. While comparatively young in age, they are well known as masters of the "royal and ancient game." Seeley was the first champion of Connecticut, a State championship which he held three years, while Graham was the first New Jersey golf champion.

In the afternoon the gallery was larger. For the first nine holes the golf was not so good as in the morning. Graham managed to get a lead of 1 up at the turn, but Seeley squared things on the eleventh. He outplayed Graham on the thirteenth, and by winning that clinched his triumph, for the remaining five holes were all halved in 4. The sensational play of the afternoon was on the seventeenth hole, where Seeley, after driving into the marsh, ran down a phenomenal thirty-foot put and halved the hole. The cards:

Seeley, out	5	5	4	5	5	4	4	4	5—41

Arden M. Robbins of the Garden City Golf Club won the President's cup, defeating W. B. Rhett of the Crescent A. C. by 9 up and 8 to play. The cup for the third set of sixteen was captured by A. S. Morrow of Baltusrol, who beat Sidney Maddock of the Crescent A. C. by 6 up and 5 to play, and the fourth cup went to J. D. Foot of Apawamis, who beat W. B. Houghton of Fox Hills, by 2 up and 1 to play. All of these matches were of 36 holes.

The open handicap had over seventy starters. Sidney Maddock and C. A. Dunning tied at 69 strokes for the net score prize, but as Dunning made the lowest gross score, 79 strokes, he took that prize and Maddock received the handicap trophy. Travis did 80. The leaders in this handicap are:

OYSTER BAY'S AQUATIC TEA.

Novel Reception Introduces Season of Seawanhaka-Corinthian Club.

The Seawanhaka-Corinthian Yacht Club introduced a novelty at Oyster Bay yesterday afternoon—a tea on the water. Commodore W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., with Mrs. Vanderbilt, in picturesque Spring attire, received aboard the flagship Virginia and were kept busy for three hours receiving their guests. Fourteen launches were employed to carry visitors back and forth from the clubhouse, and made the trips as frequently as they could unload.

All the ladies of the club were in attendance, while in the flotilla of yachts that gathered in the bay were fully 200 craft of every size and description.

The flotilla included the steam yachts Tarantula, Aloha, Tuscarora, Idler, Oneida, and Gundreda, while the schooners Laverock and Vencedor, and the yawl Peggy were prominent in their class.

Informal races were held later for gigs, but neither time nor the order at the finish were recorded.

OARSMEN ON THE HARLEM.

Crews Working Hard for Decoration Day Regatta—Columbia Boat Out.

Pleasure craft and shells were out on the Harlem River in great numbers yesterday. Several out-of-town crews, who will compete on Tuesday, arrived and others are expected to-day.

The majority of the Harlem River clubs took advantage of the fine weather and sent out their candidates early in the afternoon. Among the first to take the water were Balser and Clements, in a double shell, from the Metropolitan Boat Club. They were soon followed by the "Mets" junior eight-oared shell and the four-oared shell.

"Johnny" Smith, coach of the Nassau Boat Club, had his charges out early. He has a junior and a senior eight-oared shell and a junior four-oared shell. The senior eight will be Columbia's only opponent in the senior event.

Coach Goodwin did not take the Columbia oarsmen out until nearly dark. They practiced starting and finished with a short spin of about a mile.

Among the scullers on the river were Frank Vesely, Bohemian Boat Club; Constance F. Titus, Nonpareil Rowing Club, and John D. Breen, Wyanoke Boat Club.

Mulahy and Varley of the Atalanta Boat Club rowed as far as Sherman's Creek and back. They are working hard to get in good rowing form, as they leave for Germany on June 22, where they will be the American representatives in the Hamburg Royal Regatta on July 16 and 17.

Crescent A. C. Tennis Opening.

Lawn tennis players of the Crescent Athletic Club opened the season on the turf courts at Bay Ridge yesterday with a doubles handicap tournament. The competing teams included many of the collegiate veterans. The summary:

Men's Handicap Doubles—First Round.—Ely and Noyes, minus 15, defeated Putnam and Mollenhauer, scratch, 6-4, 6-8, 7-5. Second Round.—Gray and Cerero, plus 15, defeated Brown and Beecher, scratch, 6-4, 6-2; Oliver and Worcester, plus half 15, defeated Hazard and Fister, scratch, 6-2, 7-5.

American Team on Knollwood Courts.

Holcombe Ward, William A. Larned, William J. Clothier, and Beals C. Wright, the four players of the American challenging International lawn tennis team, began a series of matches on the courts of the Knollwood Country Club, at White Plains, yesterday. Both of the contests were in the doubles. Ward and Wright the American champions, first met Harold H. Hackett and Frederick B. Alexander, the Yale-Princeton combination, with whom they played three fast sets, winning all.

Larned and Clothier then paired against the champions, and in this match also the latter were successful in three sets to one, the point scoring being very close.

CANADIANS BEATEN IN LACROSSE MATCH

Crescent A. C. Defeats Toronto by 11 Goals to 4.

FIRST PERIOD WELL PLAYED

In Second Half, Visitors Were Badly Outclassed and Home Team Scored Rapidly.

The Toronto University lacrosse twelve were no match for the Crescent Athletic Club team and were defeated by the score of 11 goals to 4 at the Crescent Athletic Club grounds at Bay Ridge yesterday. The college boys were somewhat lighter than the Crescent players, and their attack was weak. The play at the beginning of the game and during the first half was fast, but the visitors went to pieces in the second period.

Coombs, who played centre for the collegians, was cut over the ear in the first half and retired, but resumed play again in the second period.

Wall began the scoring, by shooting a goal on a pass from Dobby soon after the match began. Morrow tied the score by shooting a goal for the visitors. The play became rough at this period, and during it Coombs was hurt. Speirs took his place for the remainder of the half. O'Rourke and Raymond each scored for the Crescent Club on passes from Wall and O'Flynn, respectively. Speirs shot a good goal, and just before the half closed Graham added a goal to Toronto's score, finishing in a tie with 3 goals each.

In the second half the university players fell off lamentably. The Crescent men rolled up eight goals, while the visitors got but one. Raymond made three, O'Flynn and Wall two each, and O'Rourke one. Graham shot the goal for the visitors. The line-up:

Crescent, 11.	Position.	Toronto, 4.
Rose	Goal	Lash
Allen	Point	Phillips
De Casanova	Cover point	Doane
Miller	First defense	Lalley
Drakeley	Second defense	Coleman

Bunched Hits and Mathewson's Good Pitching Win for the Champions.

Stupid playing by Capt. Sheckard had much to do with the defeat of the Brooklyns by the one-sided score of 4 to 1 at the Polo Grounds yesterday, but the real cause was the bunching of strong and safe hits in the third and fourth innings, a base on balls, and the dropping of a fly by Malay, all of which netted four runs. Jones's delivery was so irregular and so easily solved that he was succeeded in the fifth inning by Stricklett, who is supposed to be the originator of the wet ball. The latter used that ball so effectively that all the hits the New Yorks could collect in four innings were two. Mathewson kept the Brooklyns down to six scattering hits, and but for a wild throw of Bresnahan to catch Malay stealing second Hanlon's men would have been shut out again. In the eighth inning Stricklett was sent to first on called balls, Umpire O'Day deciding the last ball pitched was illegal.

The fielding of Dahlen, Gilbert, and McGann was a conspicuous feature of the game, but the most brilliant play was the splendid catch of Mertes's long hit to right field by Gessler. The ball was hit unusually hard, and it was only after a long run that Gessler succeeded in stopping its flight, thus saving a home run. He also made another good catch previous to this, and by a fast and accurate line throw to Batch showed what one can become of Brown had he attempted to make third on the catch.

The first ball pitched by Mathewson was sent to right field by Sheckard for one base, but he allowed himself to be hit by Gessler's next ball and was declared out. Further on in the game, with two men on bases and no one out, the Brooklyn Captain surprisingly attempted to bunt on the third strike. Gessler and Batch made force hits, and for the sixth time the Brooklyns were retired without scoring. In the following inning, however, after two men were out, Malay hit safely, reached third on a wild throw by Bresnahan to second, and scored on Ritter's hit.

After Donlin was placed at first on four bad balls Browne's hard hit bounded into the open seat at right field for a home run. The next two men were put out, but Mertes hit safely and scored on Malay's muff of Dahlin's hit. The other run was the result of doubles by Mathewson and Donlin. The score:

CLEVELAND'S TIMELY BATTING GAVE THEM A VICTORY OVER NEW YORK.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, May 27.—Cleveland made as many hits but more errors than New York to-day, but won by bunching the hits when hits meant runs. Moore, who pitched for Cleveland, was touched up rather freely, showed a little wildness, and had some ugly errors behind him, but he proved invincible at critical times, and held the game well in hand when, with the New York players perilously near tieing the score, he kept the best hitters from getting the necessary singles.

Griffith tried hard to win, for he was anxious to show the 9,000 persons present that his team could take a game occasionally. He started out by putting Dougherty on the bench and giving his batting order a big shake-up. Anderson went to left field and Chase resumed his place at first. Hogg went in to pitch. For four innings Hogg kept Cleveland without a hit, but in the fifth Bradley's drive, Turner's sacrifice, and Bemis's two-bagger sent one run over the plate. In the sixth inning he was hit for a double and a single and two runs were thrown in netted two more runs for Cleveland. Then a sore arm developed, and Powell was sent in to stem the tide. But the Clevelands had not forgotten how easy it was to run Thursday, and though he held them without a hit in the seventh inning, they landed on him hard in the eighth, and soon had three more runs to the good.

Moore blanked the New Yorkers for six innings, but Chase's liner in the seventh and McQuire's and Fultz's singles sent in a run. A combination of errors gave them another in the eighth, and a present to Orth in the ninth, followed by Keeler's sharp drive, gave the visitors a third run. The score:

DETROIT, 3; PHILADELPHIA, 2.

DETROIT, Mich., May 27.—In a game that was in doubt until the last man retired, Detroit closed the series with a victory from Philadelphia to-day. The fielding of Crawford was the feature, the double play between him and Drill being the fastest ever seen here. O'Leary led in batting, and his steal of home proved the winning run. Score:

Jersey City Won and Lost in Double-Header with Rochester.

Special to The New York Times.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 27.—In a double-header this afternoon Rochester and Jersey City broke even. Rochester shut out the visitors in the first game and Jersey City returned the compliment in the second. The first game was a pitchers' battle, Faulkner receiving the better support. While Clarkson pitched splendid ball, errors in the fourth inning gave Rochester the game. In the second contest Fertsch batted all over the field. Ragged fielding and many errors added to the large score of the visitors. The scores:

BALTIMORE, 4; MONTREAL, 3.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTREAL, Quebec, May 27.—By a batting rally in the ninth inning, poor fielding on the part of the locals, Baltimore won by 4 to 3 to-day. Pappalau was heavily hit nearly all through, but sensational throws by Kuhns from right to third cut off two visitors. Score by innings:

Special to The New York Times.

TORONTO, Ontario, May 27.—In the final game of the first series in Toronto this afternoon Newark won by a score of 6 to 4. In a dispute in the fourth inning as to whether a hit was foul or not, Shea was put off the field. In the eighth inning, when the bases were full and two out, Applegate replaced Crystall, but forced a run by a base on balls. Latimer struck safely to centre and two runs were scored. Toronto has released Fuller, one of the catchers. The score:

SOLDIERS BEAT SAILORS.

Seventh Regiment Wins Annual Baseball Game from Naval Battalion.

In the second annual baseball game played yesterday afternoon at the American League Baseball Park between the Seventh Regiment and First Naval Battalion the former won in an exciting finish by the score of 4 to 2. There was a big crowd on hand, and the contest was in doubt until the last inning. A two-base hit and a brace of errors gave the sailor lads two runs in the second inning, by which score they led to the seventh inning, when a couple of bases on balls and a wild throw enabled the regimental team to make a run.

The complexion of the game was changed in the ninth inning when the Seventh went to bat. Up to this inning Andrews had kept the naval batters down to one hit, but a single, a double, a triple, and a bad muff in the centre field gave the Seventh team three runs and the game. Bob Yorhis struck out fifteen of the Naval Battalion, while Andrews struck out nine. The score:

PRINCETON, 6; PENNSYLVANIA, 0.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., May 27.—The Princeton baseball team won its second game from the University of Pennsylvania this afternoon by the score of 6 to 0, but this score does not show the superiority over their rivals which was evident in the playing of the "Tigers." Brady, for the visitors, was wild and ineffective. Ziegler played well, although he dropped a fine drive. Byram pitched an exceptionally fine game for Princeton, striking out fourteen men and not allowing a hit. Only Pennsylvania players touched first base, and no one got further than second. Score by innings:

CORNELL, 2; MANHATTAN, 1.

ITHACA, N. Y., May 27.—Cornell defeated Manhattan College to-day by 2 to 0. The game was uninteresting as a whole, although a number of the innings ended with remarkable pitching by Umstead, when Manhattan would have the bases full. Score by innings:

CRESCENT A. C., 3; FORDHAM, 1.

The Crescent Athletic Club team defeated the Fordham University nine yesterday at Bay Ridge by 3 to 1 in a listless game. The pitching honors were evenly divided between Stillman and Murray. The Crescents scored their three runs on errors, while Fordham's tally was made on Murray's home run drive between centre and right fields, in the ninth inning. Score by innings:

YALE, 7; GEORGETOWN, 1.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 27.—Yale won from Georgetown this afternoon by 7 to 1, having lost two games to that team during the Eastern trip in the South. It was a victory won by superior batting in the early innings, and by taking advantage of chances offered by looseness of Georgetown's fielding. Score by innings:

AMERICAN OARSMEN TO ROW IN GERMANY

Atalanta Double Crew Will Compete in Hamburg Regatta.

TO SEND CREWS OVER HERE

Elaborate Plans Projected to Establish Annual Contests Between Two Countries.

Negotiations are pending for an invasion of American regattas by German crews and the possible establishment of periodical international contests between the oarsmen of the two countries. Heretofore, with one exception, transatlantic international rowing has been confined to America and England. True, entries have been received for our National regatta, but no German crew has yet competed on this side of the water. So, unless the present plans fail, the novelty of oarsmen from Berlin and Hamburg contesting rowing supremacy with our best crews will be seen this year at Baltimore when the annual regatta of the National Association of Amateur Oarsmen is held.

Moreover, the schedule of German regattas has been arranged to admit of American crews racing at Hamburg and returning to this country in abundant time to compete in the National regatta. Accordingly the Atalanta Boat Club of this city has been entered at the Hamburg Regatta on July 16 and 17. It will be represented by Mulcahy and Varley, who last year won the senior double event at St. Louis. Funds have been provided for the trip, and the oarsmen will sail on the Hamburg on June 29. They are due to arrive at Hamburg July 6, and will have ten days to become acclimated and to get into good condition.

An invitation has also been extended to the Vesper Boat Club of Philadelphia to compete. As the English Henley will close the first week in July, this would give the Philadelphians ten days to get to Hamburg after the British championships. Secretary Frederick R. Fortmeyer of the National Association has arranged the details of the trip from London to Hamburg, and submitted them to the Vesper Boat Club Henley Committee for its approval. Although no action has been taken, as yet, it is probable that the Vesper eight will be found among the competitors.

Secretary Fortmeyer expects to attend the English and German regattas in an effort to induce German crews to compete at Baltimore. If successful it is expected that in future the dates of the American and German national regattas will be arranged to permit crews of either country to compete in both events. This is the plan now outlined in the correspondence which has passed between the American and German authorities.

Should Secretary Fortmeyer go abroad it is hoped that English, French, and other foreign crews may be induced to come over for the National regatta. It is known that the Belgians are anxious to send their best oarsmen to this country. The others would readily follow the German lead, no doubt.

As for reciprocal visits of American crews abroad, it has already been determined that

PRESIDENT TO HAVE BUSY MEMORIAL DAY

Elaborate Programme Laid Out for Him in Brooklyn.

PARADES IN TWO BOROUGHS

In Manhattan 16,000 Men Will Be in Line—Meeting at Carnegie Hall to Conclude Observance.

Memorial Sunday and Memorial Day observances to-day and on Tuesday will be on a scale that will excel those of recent years. Brooklyn on Tuesday will be the centre of popular attraction because of the visit of President Roosevelt, who will assist and speak at several notable functions, including a reception at the Union League Club House, the unveiling of the statue to Major Gen. Henry W. Slocum, the review of the parade of the Grand Army of the Republic of Kings County, and an address to sailors at the Sands Street Naval Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, where he will be the guest of Miss Gould. He will go direct from Sands Street to an annex boat of the Pennsylvania Railroad service and not set foot on Manhattan.

In the Brooklyn parade will be about 9,000 regulars and veterans. In the Grand Army parade in Manhattan about 16,000 persons will participate. There will be exercises after the parade at the reviewing point, the Soldiers and Sailors' Memorial Monument at Eighty-ninth Street and Riverside Drive. At the tomb of Gen. U. S. Grant memorial services will be conducted.

The arrangements for the reception and entertainment of President Roosevelt were practically completed yesterday by the Union League Club committee and the local authorities. The President is due to arrive at the Pennsylvania Station in Jersey City at 7 A. M. May 30. His party will be received by Chief of Police Murphy, and his safety will be looked after by Chief Secret Service Agent Tyree and several of his staff and the picked men usually detailed from the Mulberry Street Headquarters. The party will be received in Brooklyn by a detail of police in command of Borough Inspector Adam A. Cross. Mounted police and Squadron C will form the escort to the clubhouse by the following route: Hicks Street, Pierrepont Street, Clinton Street, Schermerhorn Street, Nevins Street, State Street, Flatbush Avenue, Hanson Place, Greene, Clinton, Gates, and Belford Avenues, and Dean Street.

COMMITTEES TO MEET HIM.

At Jersey City Mr. Roosevelt will be welcomed by committees from the Union League Club and the Grand Army organizations. The route of the Presidential party will be under special police escort, and as an extra measure of prudence six police telephone stations connecting with Police Headquarters have been set up along it, and a reserve will be held at the State Street Central Office.

The President will have a formal reception at the club and breakfast, and start first for the unveiling stand at Bedford Avenue and Eastern Parkway. After the ceremonies he will go to the unveiling stand near by. When the parade is over he will address Miss Gould's protégés at 167 Sands Street, and unless there is a change in the programme he will time his departure so as to reach the Pennsylvania Station by 1 P. M. to return to Washington.

The ceremonies at the unveiling of the Slocum statue will include the presentation of the monument to the city by Park Commissioner M. J. Kennedy and its acceptance by Mayor McClellan, and an address by the President. The post of honor at the unveiling will be given to Henry W. Slocum Post, No. 28, G. A. R. At Sands Street Mr. Roosevelt will be received by a committee of honor, among whose members are Jacob H. Schiff, George J. Gould and John D. Rockefeller, Jr.

TEN DIVISIONS IN PARADE.

The Kings County Decoration Day parade will have Col. Daniel Simmons, Jr., as Grand Marshal and George H. Jackson as Adjutant General. It will form with head of column on Bedford Avenue, at South Eighth Street, and will move at 10 A. M. in ten divisions, led by a detachment of the United States Marine Corps, under command of Capt. A. W. Catlin. Following will be a division of the National Guard commanded by Major Gen. James McLeer; Second Company Signal Corps, Forty-seventh, Fourteenth, and Twenty-third Infantry, Thirteenth Heavy Artillery, Third Battery Light Artillery and Second Battalion Naval Militia; two divisions of the Grand Army of the Republic; the Veteran Brigade; United Spanish War Veterans; Sons of Veterans, letter carriers and fraternal societies; American Volunteer Cadets and Boys' Brigade. With the G. A. R. divisions will be disabled veterans in carriages. Twenty G. A. R. posts will be in line.

The Manhattan Borough Memorial Day parade will be marshaled by Joseph E. Lord, with Albert H. Rogers Chief of Staff and Adjutant General, and it will be reviewed at Eighty-ninth Street and Riverside Drive by Lieut. Gov. M. Linn Bruce. The Old Guard, under Major S. E. Briggs, will be special escort, and the special guards of honor at the stand are the Veteran Corps of Artillery, the Rev. Morgan Dix Commander, and the Washington Continental Guards, Capt. W. B. Tufts. Among the special aides of Lieut. Gov. Bruce will be Gen. Daniel E. Sickles, Gen. O. O. Howard, Samuel Sloan, Chauncey M. Depew, Seth G. Kay, Perry Belmont, Rear Admiral J. B. Coghlan, Cornelius N. Bliss, Henry Clews, and Herman Ridder. Headquarters will be at Columbus Circle. The head of the column will halt for the defile at Eighty-sixth Street and Riverside Drive, and the parade will start at 9 A. M., by way of Central Park West, Seventy-second Street, Broadway, and Eighty-sixth Street to Riverside Drive. Heading the column will be 200 marines and bluejackets from the United States ship Tacoma, Lieut. Commander Henry George, United States Navy; Company F, United States Infantry, Capt. Edward Bell; Marine Battalion, Lieut. H. F. Bryan; detail from United States battleship Alabama, Lieut. A. Crist; Major Gen. C. F. Roe will command the National Guard Division, Squadron A, Twenty-second Regiment Engineers, and First Battery. Gen. George Moore Smith commands the First Brigade, First Company, Signal Corps, and Seventy, Sixty-ninth, Ninth, Twelfth, and Seventy-first Regiments.

GRAND ARMY FOLLOWS.

Next in formation will be the First Battalion, Naval Militia, State of New York, Commander W. B. Franklin. The Grand Army of the Republic, led by Grand Marshal Lord, with a brilliant staff and appanages, follows in ten divisions, the first four comprising fifty posts, camps, and organizations. The fifth division is of Spanish War Veterans, the sixth the Army and Navy Union, the seventh the Cadet Division; the eighth includes the Gardes Lafayette and the Vétérans des Armées de Terre et de Mer, 1870-1871. In the ninth division are eleven Italian volunteer military organizations, and in the tenth the Manhattan Rifles, the Hebrew Orphan Asylum Cadets, the Zion Guards, and the Hebrew Sheltering Guardian Society Cadets.

After the parade and a salute from the Tacoma there will be had at the Wadsworth, and two cannon ball platforms:

Song, "America."
Pupils Public School No. 165, David E. Gaddis, Principal.
Prayer, the Rev. Dr. Rushton.

Battle Hymn of the Republic.
Pupils Public School No. 165.

Pupils Public School No. 165.

In the evening memorial services will be held at Carnegie Hall. Seth Low will preside, and the orator of the evening will be Senator Depew. Capt. "Jack" Crawford, the scout, who served with Gens. Custer and Miles, will recite.

The observance of Memorial Day at Gen. Grant's tomb will be as impressive in character as on former anniversaries, and the Tacoma will fire a salute of twenty-one guns in honor of the great soldier.

Other features of the day will be many. The Ancient Order of Hibernians will attend mass at St. Patrick's Cathedral at 11 A. M.

The boys of the Morris High School will hoist the National emblem on the flagstaff in McKinley Square, and Wilson's Battery will fire a salute at sunrise. After the memorial services members of John A. Dix Post, No. 135, G. A. R., will go on the steamer Albertina to Trinity Cemetery to Gen. Dix's tomb, where there will be an appropriate service and a benediction by his son, the Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix. The post will take with them the famous flag about which Secretary Dix sent the message to New Orleans in 1861, "If any one attempts to haul down the American flag shoot him on the spot."

Special memorial services will be held on Tuesday by the Grand Army of the Republic at Cypress Hills Cemetery, Germain Metternich Post, No. 122, at Lutheran Cemetery, and S. F. Dupont Post, No. 187, at New National Cemetery.

MANY CELEBRATIONS TO-DAY.

Graves of Veterans Will Be Decorated by Comrades.

Scores of Sabbath day celebrations of Memorial anniversary have been arranged for to-day by Grand Army posts, associations, and bereaveu relatives, and in cemeteries where the soldier dead sleep.

The various posts of Manhattan and the Bronx had several days ago made arrangements to decorate the resting places of comrades with flowers and wreaths and to recognize the valor and services of those eminent in the civil war and other struggles who are immortalized in monument. Some of the shrines of patriots and statesmen which will be remembered by a tribute will be those of Farragut, Lincoln, Seward, Sherman, Washington, and Lafayette. Special floral symbols will be laid on the Soldiers' and Sailors' Memorial Monument, in the Grant Mausoleum, and in St. Paul's Churchyard. At the Cypress Hills Cemetery the Army and Navy Union of Kings County will have impressive ceremonials at the grave of the valiant dead.

The orator of the day will be the Rev. John P. Chidwick of St. Ambrose Roman Catholic Church in New York and at the ceremonies he will be assisted by National Commander Hugh H. Hurry, Past Department Commander Joseph W. Kay of the Grand Army of the Republic, and Harrison C. Glore. Music will be by the Brooklyn Saengerbund, conducted by Hugo Steinbruch. Father Chidwick will review a parade of the Union, which will start from Jamaica and Crescent Avenues at 1:15 P. M., headed by Grand Marshal Long, in four divisions, comprising detachments from the United States Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, twelve garrisons, Grand Army posts, civil war veteran societies, United Spanish War Veterans, and cadet corps. The honorary committee consists of Gen. Horatio C. King, John J. Fitzgerald, Thomas O'Neill, Major Walter Thorn, Surgeon Major H. F. Eichacker, William Chambers, Past Department Commander Joseph W. Kay, Jacob Ruppert, Adjt. Gen. John Schumacher, Capt. Champe S. Andrews, H. C. Glore, and A. E. Kleinert.

At the Lincoln Statue, Prospect Park, to-day the Abel Smith First Long Island Foot, No. 435, G. A. R., will have exercises which will comprise prayer by the Rev. Luther D. Gable, and addresses by Congressmen George E. Waldo and Charles T. Dunwell. The Thomas C. Devin Post, No. 148, will decorate the tomb of the Prison Ship Martyrs, and Daniel J. Griffin and E. Gaston Higginbotham will speak. A flag service will be held at the West Twenty-third Street Baptist Church, and Grand Marshal Lord and his staff will attend it. A military high mass is to be celebrated this morning at the Marine Barracks in the Brooklyn Navy Yard by the Navy Chaplain, the Rev. Father W. H. I. Reaney. Commemorative services will be held in the afternoon at the Naval Cemetery, Brooklyn, by Naval Post No. 516 of Manhattan. Prayer will be offered by Chaplain Reaney, and Father W. A. Olmstead will tell of the fight of the Monitor and Merrimac.

NEW UNION FOR SUBWAY AND ELEVATED WORKERS

Socialists Organizing Them with Secrecy as the Motto.

SURFACE CAR MEN IN IT, TOO

Present Organization the Outcome of the Unsuccessful Strike, the Promoters Say.

A new union, designed to take in not only the employes of the Subway and elevated roads, but all the surface car employes in this city, has been launched, under the name of the United Railway Workers' Local Assembly No. 9, the Socialist Trade and Labor Alliance. The officers are Samuel French, President; W. E. Patrick, Treasurer, and E. J. Roselle, Financial Secretary.

A circular was sent out yesterday, addressed to "Fellow-Workers of the Railway Industry of Greater New York," giving the plans of the formation of the new body. Headquarters have been established at 150 East One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street.

The methods of this organization are radically different from those of other unions. The printed applications for membership says, among other things, in reference to the methods of organization:

"To meet the requirements of the conditions existing on the railroads of Greater New York this organization is formed on a plan that insures absolute secrecy.

"The units of the organization shall be groups of not more than ten members.

"The names of the members of any one group shall not be disclosed to other groups or any one whomsoever.

"The list of members and groups shall be zealously guarded by the President and Secretary of the United Railway Workers of Greater New York, who shall be the sole custodians thereof.

"The group organizer shall thereafter be the medium for collection and payment of the dues of the members of his group, said dues to be 25 cents per month."

The initiation fee is fixed at the modest sum of 50 cents, and per capita assessments are to be made on the last days of March, June, September, and December to be set aside as a fund to establish a railroad workers' weekly newspaper to be furnished to every member.

The circular says that the union is the result of the Interborough strike, and makes some charges against the former officers of the Motormens' and Trainmens' Organization, but gives no details.

The circular says the new organization was started shortly after the strikers began returning to work. At that time, it says, the returning men were so dissatisfied that it was possible to renew the strike, but that the officers of the new union thought it inadvisable.

"Everywhere," it says, "our fellow-workers on the roads admit the need of rapidly organizing into one great body. This should not only include trainmen and motormen, but all the gatemen, ticket choppers, agents, platform men, porters, lampmen, car cleaners, repairers, trackmen, ironworkers, switchmen, electricians, power house employes, and clerks."

Subway and elevated employes who were asked about the new union yesterday did not seem enthusiastic. Some of them said it was merely a bait of the Socialists to get new members and spread propaganda. Many of the men said they hadn't heard of it.

SWINDLER IN UNIFORM.

Hoodwinks Doctor Into Recommending Recruits Who Give Up $40 Each.

Wearing the uniform of a First Lieutenant in the United States Army, with the cap and red cross sleeve mark of the Medical Corps, a young man arraigned under the name of Harry Davis, but known under three other names, C. Quagliarella, W. W. Spencer, and Michael Angelo, was held in $2,000 bail for examination in the Jefferson Market Court yesterday on a charge of grand larceny.

The complainant was D. Anselmo Vecchio of 380 East One Hundred and Thirteenth Street. Detective Sergeants Petrosino and Bonnoll, who arrested the man, say that they will produce four or five other complainants at the next examination, on Monday.

The prisoner's method of swindling, according to Dr. Vecchio, was to represent himself as a member of the Marine Corps, engaged in looking for recruits in the Medical Department. He said he came from the same province in Italy as the doctor, and they became friends at once. Dr. Vecchio recommended several young Italians as recruits, and Quagliarella, which is believed to be his right name, promised to get them appointments. Dr. Vecchio says the prisoner asked for $40 deposit as a guarantee of "good faith" from each man. He also gave Quagliarella $40. Early last week, Dr. Vecchio says, Quagliarella took his party of "recruits" over to Weehawken for an outing. Dinner was ordered in a hotel, and while they were waiting for it he asked to be excused for a minute and left the room. He did not return.

The detectives found him last night at Fourteenth Street and Eighth Avenue, still wearing his uniform. He was living at 328 West Fourteenth Street. The detectives found $236 on him, which was within a few dollars of the amount he is alleged to have obtained from the complainants.

It is said at Police Headquarters that under the name of W. W. Spencer the prisoner was convicted of swindling in New Haven and Syracuse. He was released from the New Haven jail only a few months ago.

The police say that Dr. Vecchio has made good to several other surgeons the amounts they gave up, because he introduced the prisoner to them.

AFTER ABUSIVE POLICEMEN.

McAdoo Commends McAvoy for Transferring Man Who Insulted Citizen.

Commissioner McAdoo was not at his office at Police Headquarters yesterday. His Secretary gave out a statement from Mr. McAdoo regarding the transfer of Policeman James V. McCarthy from the mounted squad in Central Park to the East One Hundred and Fourth Street Station by Deputy Commissioner McAvoy. Mr. McAdoo said the policeman was not transferred because he arrested ex-Mayor Grant's coachman.

"Last March a thoroughly reputable citizen complained to me," the statement went on, "that for a slight infraction of the rules of the road, McCarthy had abused him; that he had a violent temper, and acted in a most unofficerlike and ungentlemanly way. I find now that the direct reason for his assignment out of the Park by Mr. McAvoy was a charge made by another citizen of reputation and good character that McCarthy had used toward him most foul and indecent language.

"Officers who show ruffianly dispositions and use offensive language to citizens had better not be brought before me."

$1.17 WATCH STOLEN ON CAR.

Owner Finds Thief by Seeking Man with a Disgusted Look.

Leaping from a Thirty-fourth Street car at Fifth Avenue at 7 o'clock last night along with several other men, John C. Gause of 316 West Fiftieth Street, went hunting about in the crowd in front of the Waldorf-Astoria for the person with the most disgusted expression on his face. Mr. Gause found him, and said:

"You stole my watch in the car back there."

The man broke and ran, followed by Mr. Gause. Policeman Shibles tripped up the foremost runner, whereupon a $1.17 watch fell to the pavement. Upon it Mr. Gause pounced, exclaiming rapturously:

"It's mine, it's mine—or, that is, it is the one my jeweller loaned me while he was fixing my $100 watch. But I want this man arrested on principle."

The prisoner said at the Tenderloin station that he was John Evans, 20, of 257 West Twenty-fifth Street. While walking back to the cell Evans made a peculiar shuffling, backward motion with his feet. Mr. Gause shouted at him:

"Oh, you needn't try to kick yourself. I'd a caught you, anyway."

GERMAN CATHOLICS MEET.

Programme for Their Three Days' Convention, Opening This Morning.

The tenth annual convention of the Federation of German Catholic Societies will open to-day in the Gilsey House, and will last three days. Herman Ridder is the Chairman of the local committee, and has arranged the programme, which includes a trip to Orphan Asylum Hall, Ninetieth Street and First Avenue. There Corporation Counsel Delany, representing the Mayor, will make an address of welcome, to which response will be made by Joseph Mielich, the State President. After some preliminary work the delegates will proceed to St. Joseph's Church, in Eighty-seventh Street, near First Avenue, where Bishop Cusack will bless a new flag presented by the Brooklyn societies affiliated with the federation. High mass will then be celebrated by Mgr. Peter Dauffenbach and a sermon delivered by the Rev. Fidelis Speidel, C. SS. R. The singing at the mass will be a special feature. A large choir of male voices will be assisted by a selected orchestra under the leadership of Emil Regl.

At 2:30 o'clock the regular sessions will begin at the Gilsey House. In the evening a mass meeting will be held in Carnegie Hall, at which Mr. Ridder will preside. Addresses will be made by Archbishop Farley, Bishop Stang of Fall River, Mass.; the Rev. Anthony Lammel, the Rev. J. H. Beck, and Alphonse G. Koelble. An attractive musical programme has been arranged.

To-morrow morning the Rev. Bonaventure Frey, O. M. C., will celebrate a solemn high mass in St. John's Church, in West Thirtieth Street, for the living members of the federation. After the service business will be resumed at headquarters.

The programme for Tuesday, Decoration Day, embraces a requiem mass for deceased members of the federation in St. Nicholas's Church, in Second Street, near Avenue A, with the Rev. John B. Mayer as celebrant. The delegates will then be escorted to the foot of East Third Street, where they will board one of the Iron Steamboat Company's boats, and, after a trip through the harbor and up the Hudson, will sail up the Sound to Witzel's Point View Grove, at College Point, where a dinner will be given for them by the local committees.

LETTER CARRIERS TO MARCH.

Will Parade Next Tuesday for First Time in Eleven Years.

Postmaster Willcox said yesterday that arrangements had been perfected for the letter carriers' parade on Tuesday afternoon. On that day, and for the first time in eleven years, the letter carriers of New York, 2,000 strong, will march down Fifth Avenue from Fifty-eighth Street under the leadership of Grand Marshal M. A. Fitzgerald, President of the Carriers' Association. The three battalions will be under the command of Assistant Marshals J. W. Gallagher of Station G, T. J. Bonser of Station L, and P. J. Walters of Station O.

The carriers, headed by the Letter Carriers' Band, Drum, Fife and Bugle Corps of New York and Brooklyn, will be reviewed by Postmaster Willcox, Assistant Postmaster Morgan and their respective staffs in Union Square. The parade will then move south to Astor Place, where the Cox Statue will again be formally presented to the city. Commissioner McAdoo will accept the statue, with its new pedestal, in behalf of the city.

WARNING FROM McADOO.

He Hopes Significantly That Captains Are Being Examined Fairly.

In reference to the examination by the Municipal Civil Service Commission of candidates for appointment as Police Captains, Police Commissioner McAdoo issued this statement yesterday:

I take it that it is not out of place for me to say that I am naturally very anxious that the civil service examinations for the existing vacancies in the Police Department shall be conducted throughout in such manner as to give confidence to the competitors that they are absolutely fair, impartial, and rigidly honored. I have the highest regard for the present Civil Service Commissioners, and I have no evidence that their conduct is other than that of honorable gentlemen, and that they are most carefully guarding the secrets of the commission in looking after the actions of their subordinates. I have not been consulted by them with reference to the scope of the questions for Inspectors and other grades, and I do not know on what lines the examinations are cast. Of course, I take it that the whole machinery of the examination is most carefully and scrupulously safeguarded to prevent the possibility of mistake or fraud. Otherwise all efforts to improve and render more efficient the police force will be entirely useless.

I have heard at second hand that some of the questions propounded to competing Captains were in reference to what course they would pursue under certain police conditions. Who is the judge of the merits of the answers to such questions I do not know. He ought to be some one who has personal and professional experience in police work. I doubt if any outsider could make a decision on the merits of such answers.

It is only just to myself and the gentlemen whom I have asked in to advise me that the public should know that my discretion of course, in making permanent promotions is limited entirely to the list rendered to me by the commission, and my power to make rejections from the list is likewise quite limited. The fountain head, therefore, is with the Civil Service Commission. I would be very glad indeed to furnish the commission, so far as I could, with the records of the actual police work of these men if such records count for anything in the making up of the final percentages.

I have only one power left in the matter, and that is if I found the list entirely unsatisfactory, looked at from the best police and public point of view, to ignore them and continue acting appointments. If I found myself badly handicapped I would not hesitate to take this course unless the lists lie stagnant as long as I remain in office.

SHOT OVER CARD GAME.

Ejected Italian Returned to Saloon with Pistol—Wounded Man May Die.

Francesco Ratone of 339 East One Hundred and Fourth Street is in the Harlem Hospital, and is likely to die as the result of a bullet wound in the right lung. He was playing cards last night with Antonio Prillio of 339 East One Hundred and Fourth Street in the saloon of Francisco Callandrelliroe on the ground floor at that address. Prillio accused Ratone of cheating and the quarrel started.

The proprietor ejected Prillio, who, it is alleged, went up stairs to his room, procured a revolver, opened the swinging doors to the saloon, and began to fire away. Three shots were fired, one of them striking Ratone.

MARY ELLEN LEASE SHRIEKS "BURGLARS!"

And Tells of a Short Man Who Threatened Her with a Gun.

HIS PAL LOOTED HER SILVER

They Got Away with $110 and a $40 Locket, but the Police Fear They Won't Be Caught.

A badly scared and very angry woman rushed into East One Hundred and Twenty-second Street from the apartment house at No. 64 early on Friday evening screaming for the police and informing the neighborhood that burglars were around. The badly frightened woman was Mrs. Mary Ellen Lease, Socialist, lecturer, writer and advocate of woman's and other rights. She told the police, when she got to the station, that she had been held up by two armed thieves in her apartment on the top floor and robbed of $110 and $40 worth of jewelry and silverware. Detectives are now looking for the thieves, but they do not expect to catch them.

Mrs. Lease lives with her son and two daughters. On Friday afternoon, according to the story she told the police, she drew some money from the bank and went shopping. She returned home about six o'clock carrying $110 in her satchel. Entering the house, she was surprised to find the door leading to her apartments open.

"How careless of me!" she said to herself, and passed on, thinking no more about it.

She went into her bedroom and threw off her hat and wrap. Then she started for the parlor, intending to glance over a new novel she had purchased. She had only taken a few steps when a short dark man, wearing a slight mustache, stepped from behind the parlor door, leveled a revolver at her head and ordered her to stop.

"If you move from where you are, or if you scream, I'll shoot you. I'm here to rob the house, but I don't want any bloodshed," said the burglar.

Mrs. Lease admits that she was too terrified to scream even if she could. The man advanced toward her, and placing the muzzle of the revolver against her forehead, ordered her to take him to the room where she had put the satchel containing the money. Mrs. Lease tremblingly obeyed.

As she turned the satchel over to him he snatched a heart-shaped locket set with a diamond, which she wore at her neck. Turning in an attempt to flee to the rear of the flat, Mrs. Lease caught a glimpse of a taller man transferring the silverware on the sideboard to a large bag.

"Now, don't move until I get out of this house," Mrs. Lease says the short man with the gun told her, as he backed out into the hallway after pocketing the contents of the satchel. Then he started downstairs. An instant later his companion followed him, throwing Mrs. Lease against the wall as he passed and stunning her. When she recovered from the shock, she said, she rushed down to the street. No policeman was in sight, but her screams aroused the whole neighborhood.

When she reported at the East One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Street station, Capt. Burns detailed Detectives Teevens, Conway, and McCormick on the case. At a late hour last night no arrests had been made.

Mrs. Lease has given the police a description of the two men. The man with the gun, she says, was short and dark, and wore dark clothes. The other man was taller. As well as she could tell from the glance she got at him, he also wore dark clothes and was smooth shaven.

Mrs. Lease is soon to start on a lecturing tour. She has been robbed before when she lived in East One Hundred and Twenty-second Street. The thieves were not caught then, either.

$800 SUNBURST STOLEN.

Mrs. Bernard Crystal Thinks That Sneak Thieves Got It.

Mrs. Bernard Crystal, who lives on the second floor of the Chester Court, 86 West One Hundred and Nineteenth Street, has reported to the police that on Thursday afternoon between 4 and 6 o'clock, a diamond sunburst, valued at $800, was stolen from her bedroom. This is only a few blocks away from the house in which Mrs. Mary Ellen Lease was robbed.

Mrs. Crystal says she was out most of Thursday afternoon. She returned just before 6 o'clock to dress for the theatre. When she opened the drawer of her bureau to get the sunburst it was gone. It contained twenty-seven diamonds.

The Crystals keep two girl servants, but these are not suspected. Mrs. Crystal says that as her bedroom door is close to the hall entrance, she believes the theft was committed by sneak thieves.

ROBBED BY A NEAT YOUNG MAN

House Thoroughly Ransacked by the New Boarder—Loot Worth $4,000.

Mrs. Anna Maddox, widow of a former member of the Broadway firm of J. H. Dunham & Co., went to stay with Mrs. Annie Reynolds, at 125 East Thirty-fourth Street, several weeks ago. Mrs. Reynolds, who has a furnished room house there, was ill, and her friend went there to look after things. She took with her jewelry and money and valuable papers, and a little safe to keep them in. But she didn't keep all her valuables in the safe.

Some time near the middle of May a neatly dressed young man applied for a room. He liked one on the second floor. He moved in. He said he was an employe of no little prominence in the Equitable Life Assurance Society. F. C. Miller was the name he gave.

Small articles soon began to be missed by the occupants of the house. Then articles of greater value disappeared. Last Tuesday Mrs. Maddox left the house for a while. When she got back she found that some one had entered her room with a duplicate key and rifled her trunk and bureau. Several rings, a watch, a necklace, and other jewelry valued at $3,000, together with $50 in money, had been stolen. The thief also took with him deeds to property in West Forty-third Street and some bonds.

Mrs. Maddox's iron safe was found in the new boarder's room. It had not been opened. Lying beside it were a gold watch and a necklace, evidently left by some one in haste. Other rooms in the house had also been ransacked. The thief's total booty was put at $4,000, but Mrs. Maddox was the heaviest loser.

J. H. Miller was not seen again in the house. The baggage he said he expected daily never came. Last night Mrs. Maddox told the East Thirty-fifth Street police and detectives were assigned to look for the neatly dressed Miller.

NEWEST ASTOR HOTEL TO BE PUSHED AHEAD

John Jacob Has Supplied a Loan to Finish the Knickerbocker.

JAS. B. REGAN TO MANAGE IT

Improvements Added at a Cost of a Million Dollars in the Plans—Ready a Year Hence.

Work will be begun on June 15 on the completion of the Hotel Knickerbocker, at the southeast corner of Broadway and Forty-second Street, owned by Col. John Jacob Astor. For eighteen months the property has stood idle, earning only billboard revenues from the high fence around it.

Col. Astor is now in sole control of the property and has agreed to complete the building and lease it to James B. Regan for twenty years, with the privilege of renewal for an extra twenty years. The rental for the first twenty years will amount to about $8,000,000, or $300,000 a year.

The building will not be completed according to the original plans. Architects Trowbridge & Livingston, who designed the Hotel St. Regis for Col. Astor, have been at work for several weeks on the new plans. Another story will be added to the structure, and while the exterior will not be changed materially, the whole interior arrangement and the general finishing of the hotel have undergone sweeping revision. The building will be completed on a much more elaborate scale than was originally planned, with the result that its total cost will be increased by more than $1,000,000. The first estimate was $2,250,000, the present one $3,360,000. Mr. Regan says that he expects to open the hotel on Oct. 1 next year.

According to the new plans, the hotel will contain 556 rooms and 390 bathrooms. On the ground floor will be the foyer, public restaurant, palm room, and café. The greater part of the second floor will be given over to banquet rooms and private dining rooms. At the easterly end of the second floor, on the Forty-second Street side, there will be a ballroom, measuring 50 by 105 feet and rising through two stories, so that it will have a height of nearly thirty feet. The basement will be fitted up as a grillroom, and from this lower level the hotel will have two entrances to the Times Square Subway station. The combined seating capacity of the hotel's public dining rooms will be 1,550.

The work of completing the structure will be done by J. & E. L. Pennock of Philadelphia, who, as the International Realty and Construction Company, did the earlier work upon it, until operations were suspended, a year and a half ago. This company had secured the Knickerbocker site from Col. Astor under a long-term ground lease, together with a building loan of $1,800,00 with which to construct the hotel.

The Knickerbocker Hotel Company, in which James B. Regan, Jesse Lewisohn, and Godfrey S. Hyms were interested, was organized, to take over the building upon its completion and operate it. Everything went along smoothly until the structure was "inclosed," as the builders say, when suddenly work on it was stopped. The reason for this, according to explanations given yesterday, was a disagreement in the Knickerbocker Hotel Company. The International Realty and Construction Company, seeing that, as a result of this disagreement, it was likely to have on its hands a three-million-dollar hotel without a tenant, declined to go ahead. The latter company, however, under the terms of its ground lease, remained legally in possession of the property until the 1st of last February. The interval since then has been taken up with the revision of the plans and the arranging of the lease by which Mr. Regan will get sole control of the hotel upon its completion.

GOLFING SERGEANT SCORES.

Catches Alleged Pickpocket on Way Home from Links.

After a chase of nearly two miles, which led over freight cars and the fences of the Morris Park Race Track, Sergt. John Pepper, of the Westchester Police Station, with the assistance of his wife, last night arrested a young man, who is alleged to have tried to pick the Sergeant's pocket. The prisoner gave his name as Frank Lewis, of 270 West Fortieth Street.

Sergt. Pepper and his wife had been to the Fox Hills Golf Club on Staten Island. The Sergeant had his clubs with him. On the Second Avenue elevated he noticed Lewis, who at West Farms followed him on a trolley car. Lewis, it is alleged, put his hand in the Sergeant's pocket and attempted to pull out a pocketbook which contained $150. The sergeant caught the man's hand and arrested him.

On the Unionport road Lewis's hat blew off and the car was stopped. The Sergeant held the prisoner by the shoulder and both went for the hat. Mrs. Pepper, who was carrying the clubs, alighted, too. When they reached the hat, Lewis struck Pepper a blow in the stomach, knocking him down. Lewis then ran.

The chase continued to the Van Nest freight yards, where Lewis ran over the top of freight cars, with Pepper close behind. A veteran Continued on next page

KING'S INQUIRY PLAN UNWISE, WROTE METCALF

Secretary of Commerce Against Insurance Investigation.

NOT INTER-STATE COMMERCE

Matter May Be Again Presented to U. S. Supreme Court for Further Adjudication.

William F. King, who recently wrote to President Roosevelt asking him to take a hand in the insurance situation in this country and who received a reply from Secretary Loeb, made public yesterday a report by Secretary Metcalf of the Department of Commerce and Labor upon the subject to the President. The report is as follows:

Department of Commerce and Labor,
Office of the Secretary,
Washington, May 25, 1906.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge, by reference, the letter of Mr. William F. King, suggesting the appointment of a commission for the investigation of life insurance companies, and the letter of Mr. Ralph W. Breckinridge referring to the subject of Federal supervision of insurance. These letters, with their inclosures, I return herewith.

Under the act creating the Bureau of Corporations, authority was given to collect useful information regarding corporations engaged in inter-State commerce," including corporations engaged in insurance."

The question of the power of the Commissioner of Corporations to compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of papers in any investigation of an insurance company has been thoroughly considered. In view of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States that insurance is not inter-State commerce, I am of the opinion that it would be unwise to attempt such an investigation as is suggested by Mr. King

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

It is rare to have such an aggregation of news as last week's, or such fluttering markets. And after all we do not seem to have got much "forrarder," the news seemingly having been wasted, good and bad alike. We began with sheet-iron thunder from Boston, which was followed by just enough of apparent confirmation to give the nervous a start like that following the slamming of a door. There was, for example, the failure—disgraceful in every aspect—of the Merchants' Trust Company, followed by individual failures in Cincinnati and Boston and sundry small bank failures. About the crops there were more sorts of news than there are moods of weather in an April day, with the produce markets dancing correspondingly. The delicate iron trade situation was complicated by reports of the disbanding of the steel rail pool, solely and strictly for publication in connection with the Administration's tariff dilemma, and not in the least in good faith regarding the cheapening of rails. And, above all, there was the adjustment of the Northwestern railway situation, or at least the adjustment of a considerable section of it in a manner setting a promising precedent for the similar settlement of the remainder. For good measure may be thrown in the usual assortment of news regarding the Oriental war; the crablike progress toward—or from—railway rate regulation; the tariff agitation, which will not down so long as the deficit is a fact and the remedy for it remains a theory; the growing seriousness of the strike in Chicago, where thousands of civilians are under arms against angered mobs of workers unnecessarily idle, with the spectre of soldiery in the background. Possibly it is because the lights and shades in this picture blend into neutral drab that prices show so little net alteration. Certain it is that the averages for the week show less change than they easily might in a single day upon any one of several of the above items. As matter of fact that is the reason why the week's net change is so slight, for the alternations of strength and weakness were frequent and wide, not only as between Wednesday and Thursday, for instance, but even as between morning and afternoon of more than one day. Yet upon the whole week the industrial average is only .12 per cent. higher. The railway average rose 1.62, retaining so much of this large advance upon the Northwestern adjustment.

The most important of the week's domestic events was the agreement of the Northern Pacific and Union Pacific to bury the hatchet in the Clearwater and Snake River country. Perhaps it is more accurate to say that it is an agreement not to dig up the hatchet, rather than to bury it, for there has been an armistice in that rich region ever since before the Northern Securities adjustment. Union Pacific was not a party to that arrangement except indirectly, but is a party to this adjustment by direct participation of Mr. Harriman. He agreed upon behalf of Union Pacific that there is no necessity for parallel and competing railways in a territory where either party might build with equal propriety, and there accordingly is to be but one road. The project is simplicity itself, and serves to exemplify the futility of too minute statutory regulation of details. The statutes are the rules of the game, and nothing more can be asked than that the game shall be played according to the rules. Doubtless we shall hear more in the future, as we have heard in the past, regarding the badness of the citizenship disclosed by evasion of the statutes, and the unprofessional conduct of the able counsel who teach their clients how lawfully to do unlawful things.

There is an idea there, but it is mainly a question of phrase-making and point of view. Looking to the substance rather than to the form, it is incredible that this aspersion upon reputable lawyers and captains of railways should be justified. There is no sort of property more costly or more difficult of concealment than railways. Whoever puts millions into them gives equivalent hostages to abide by the laws, for railways break the laws at their peril, and cannot escape the Sheriff in execution of judgment. Their property can neither be removed nor sold to any other use, and it is subject to more sorts of jurisdiction—city, county, State, Federal—than any other. Not only are they selfishly anxious to obey the law—they are eager to defer even to public opinion. It is matter of record that in eighteen years the Inter-State Commerce Commission has not received an average of one complaint a week in a business of thousands of millions annually. Moreover, the commission's recommendations, which lacked legal sanction, being mere expressions of opinion and advice, were complied with by the railways in 92 per cent. of all cases. Yet there is talk of sending men to prison for crimes which were not known to be crimes at all, or by anybody, until the Supreme Court settled it by an opinion as narrowly balanced as possible, the balance being settled by a Judge who argued one way and voted another. There is a heap of humbug in the alleged criminality of railways, and the equally alleged popular hostility to them.

The gentleman from Boston is in some uncertain degree responsible for this news failing of its stimulating effect. "Afterward, therefore because of" is a maxim of which he has a higher opinion than logicians, who re- [illegible] follicates the argument that [illegible] the profounder [illegible] has [illegible] chants' Trust Company failure. That is too small game for him, and the real shocker is still to come. Perhaps he thinks, or hopes, that he may be fortunate enough to attract attention indefinitely if only he goes on making his predictions spicier and more specific. But there are alternatives. People no longer read him so numerously or so eagerly as at first. Hence his alarums are constantly more venturesome, and finally he may overstep his limit in either of two directions. "We'll get him before we are done," said the speculators last week, cynically inferring that his game is becoming desperate because his language is so increasingly extravagant, and there is always the possibility that his lawyers may not succeed in keeping him within the law. Certainly no reflection of disappointed speculation finds expression here. Upon the contrary opportunity is taken to give expression to the influential opinion that he is doing excellent service in solidifying and improving the banking situation which he is attacking. He is organizing runs upon the banks in the frank hope of ruining them. As the only people who could run upon the banks are depositors, and as depositors are necessarily anxious to strengthen rather than to ruin the banks which hold their credits, the project is impracticable enough. But an even greater stupidity than counseling people to cut off their own noses in order to spite other people's faces—or simply to oblige the gentleman—is the expectation that the banks will sit still and wait for the run to begin. Are the bankers the only people not to read the gentleman's warnings, and are they to read them and be unprepared? There cannot be any doubt that if there is any bank in doubtful condition that is the bank which is going to prepare itself. Queer loans and slow debtors are under pressure equal to any that the Bank Examiner can bring to bear, and the situation which the gentleman sought to weaken is strengthened. He is doing a service of a sort, and it should be credited to his earthly reward, although unintentional. Doubtless in his final reward he will get credit only for the ill he intended, rather than for the good he does by indirection, although hardly by stealth. His enlivenment of dull times should prevent harsh judgment of him in a world so censorious that even he does not escape disparaging comparisons of him with those whom he attacks.

The crops are a week older, and doubt that they are ruined still exists. That settles it—they are in good shape. Real ruin cannot be hid. It is only speculative ruin about which there are two opinions. Winter wheat is so near harvest that soon we shall be having count of bushels instead of estimates of condition. Spring wheat is improving satisfactorily, in official language. Corn is late and irregular, but there is ample time for seasonable weather to remedy whatever there is of ill in the situation. Averaging the grain situation, it is necessary to say that we have passed the perils of the season exceptionally well thus far, and there is no apparent reason why the future should be awaited with undue anxiety. Rather there is a little something to spare in the grain outlook. The cotton crop situation is less promising. A leading circular—always interesting, and which would be doubly so if only its author's market position were known—threatens a loss of 4,000,000 bales from the last crop. But this loss leaves an average crop—so phenomenal was the last crop. For the same reason the current stocks are so large that any reduction would be less felt. That there will be some reduction is undoubted, for there is a decrease of both condition and acreage. Still the loss may be less than predicted, for it is surprising how closely the language of the Government's report this year follows last year's. They might almost be interchanged, and last year's conditions at picking time were not so bad. There is no need of present anxiety regarding agricultural quantities or values.

If this summary leaves the impression of a halting and uncertain speculative position, then it correctly reflects the situation. Its strongest characteristic is that the permanent factors make for hope, and that the market is checked only by temporary and meretricious considerations. When prices were many points higher than now it was said that they must fall unless the advocates of further advance realized some of their predictions of good things to happen. The situation is now reversed. Prices now seem so low that they should advance unless some of the gloomy predictions are fulfilled. The forces beneath the market strengthen with every day that basic conditions remain unaltered. The mere maintenance of conditions is all that the bulls need wish for their ultimate triumph, and they have reasons to hope for improvement of conditions. On the other hand, the simple passage of time without fulfilment of calamity talk weakens the bear position. As yet there are no facts discernible to indicate conditions outside Wall Street such as have been cultivated within it.

The Rubber Goods Plan.

Mr. Anthony Brady, as syndicate manager, and the Central Trust Company announce the detailed conditions for the exchange of Rubber Goods shares for United States Rubber Company shares, according to the general plan already reported. Deposits must be made with the Central Trust Company before June 15 next and the right is reserved either to shorten the time of receipt or to extend it, upon the discretion of the syndicate managers. GOLD EXPORTS DELAYED.

Movement Usually Begun in May Likely This Year to be Later.

The end of May is approaching without any definite indication of the commencement of the gold export movement which usually begins this month and lasts into July. Foreign exchange rates have been quite strong the past week, the price of demand sterling having risen as high as 4.87¼, but thus far there have been only theoretical discussions about gold exports, and it now seems likely that the outflow of gold will be delayed still further. One reason doubtless for the postponement of the movement beyond the usual date is the fact that for some time past the London market has been liberally supplied with gold from South Africa and elsewhere, so that the demands for the precious metal have been readily met from the current arrivals of new gold. For this reason there has been no effort made to secure gold from this centre, and the course of exchange has had no reference to Europe's gold requirements. Moreover, while money has been easy here it has been still lower abroad, and though from time to time Paris has been disturbed over questions arising from the Far Eastern war, nothing has occurred to cause the Paris market to show any real anxiety. Sterling in Paris recently rose to a level that would require an advance in our sterling rate considerably above the present level before gold exports could be arranged on a triangular operation.

The strength of sterling in Paris reflects primarily the discount markets at the two centres, that in Paris being 1½ per cent. or thereabouts, and that in London about 2½ per cent. The difference is sufficient to attract French funds to London. Thus the strength of sterling in Paris is an indication that no uneasiness is felt in that market, else it would be husbanding its resources instead of increasing its credits in London. Doubtless gold exports from New York would follow quickly any disturbance of the Paris market resulting incidentally in a decline in sterling in Paris, but barring some such disturbance the likelihood of gold exports from New York is small as matters now stand. The April report of our foreign commerce showed heavy exports, but the imports were also large, and an influence of much importance not represented in the trade figures is our imports of securities. These include not only the Japanese bonds which we purchased last month, but also the American securities which we have been buying back from Europe. So far as these purchases represent maturing obligations they are probably offset by repurchases by Europe, but, so far as the movement of securities is concerned, there is nothing to offset the purchase by us of $75,000,000 of Japanese bonds.

In fact, the advance in demand sterling to 4.87¼ was attributed largely to the buying of exchange for Japanese account, and when this buying toward the end of the week was temporarily suspended the exchange rate dropped back about a quarter of a cent. In some quarters it is estimated that already about half the proceeds of the recent $75,000,000 issue of Japanese bonds has been sent to Europe.

WHO SHOULD PAY STOCK TAX?

Suggestion That Brokers May Reasonably Be Expected to Pay It Out of Their Commissions.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In the discussion of the effect of the State tax of $2 per hundred shares on the business of the Stock Exchange, it seems to be conceded that the tax is to be paid by the customer, and not by the broker. It is a well-known fact that the profit to the broker of the difference between the interest the broker charges his customer and the rate the broker pays the trust company or bank more than pays all the office expenses of the broker, leaving the $12.50 per hundred shares which the aforesaid broker charges for buying or selling each hundred shares as a net profit. There is no other business known to the writer that shows so large compensation for so little effort. Barring the charges for theatre tickets and sleeping car accommodations, I know of none that have not been reduced within the past twenty-five years with the exception of Stock Exchange commissions.

I think in all fairness, then, that the broker should pay the $2 tax, and not the customer. I know of one prominent brokerage house who agree with me, and I believe there are many others who will, when their attention is drawn to the matter. If it is true that fewer people will deal in stocks by reason of the increased cost of doing so, on account of the tax, is it not fair to ask, would not the broker make just as much by a greater volume of business at a net commission of $10.50 per hundred shares as he would make by a less volume of business at a net commission of $12.50 per hundred shares?

A. LAMB.

New York, May 21, 1905.

As the situation now stands it would not be possible for a Stock Exchange house to pay the transfer tax that goes into effect at the beginning of the coming month, for the reason that this would be a reduction in commission below the one-eighth of 1 per cent. which is fixed by the rules of the Stock Exchange as the minimum that a Stock Exchange house may charge for buying or selling securities. The suggestion that the broker pay the transfer tax implies a change in these rules, a possible development, although one that has not yet, so far as appears, met with any extensive approval among brokerage houses.

BRITISH COPPER MARKET.

The speculative copper market has shown some recuperative power, chiefly owing, it would appear, to reaction after recent undue depression. The outlook is still the subject of considerable conjecture even among those best informed as to the trade position. It is recognised that an excellent consumption is in progress in America; but there is also a well-sustained increase in production, as to which, however, estimates are divergent. If the recent export movement can be maintained, all may be well for a further period. So far, the Amalgamated interests preserve their outward confidence in the market, leaving the field of competition to outside producers and dealers whose terms are well beneath those of the leading concern. It is suggested by some authorities that a marked decrease may soon be seen in the shipments to China, and if this really occurs America will have more metal to spare than has been available for a long time. Repurchases by operators for the Fall gave the market a fillip, which carried the price to £86, at which speculative sales again came into prominence. Buying by consumers has been [illegible] and reserve stocks evidently [illegible] considerable, but there

RECOVERY AND REACTION

Extent to Which Recent Decline Carried Prices Back to December Level.

Following the severe decline in the stock market which occurred last December, it was generally agreed that the days of the so-called Lawson panic were exceptionally good days in which to buy. This judgment was based on the belief that the market had declined as a result of hysteria rather than in response to conditions, and this view was amply confirmed by the subsequent course of events. The decline, which began toward the middle of April and culminated only at the beginning of last week, unless indeed a further decline is in store, brought the market so close to the December low level that it would appear sound reasoning that the May decline was as good time as December last in which to buy stocks, unless, indeed, the position be taken that the intervening advance had more than discounted the good conditions that have been reported in all lines of commercial activity, and that the turn in trade has quickly followed the turn in the stock market. Unless the prosperity of the past few months was nothing more than a flash in the pan it would appear that the same forces that brought about the advance during the first part of the year will continue for some time further to be operative, and that recovery should follow the May decline much as it did the December decline. The tables below give the record of thirty railroad stocks and an equal number of industrial issues from December last to the low point of the present month. They show the individual and average declines from the high point of last year to the low point of December, the recovery to the highest of the present year, and the reaction from this high to the lowest prices recorded this month:

The tabulation shows that the recent reaction carried railroad stocks to within about 2½ points of December's low and industrial shares to within 3¼ points of that level. It is interesting to note that the industrials maintained their prices slightly better than the railroads. But this showing is due largely to the very heavy declines which occurred in two of the high-priced railroad stocks, Great Northern preferred and Chicago and Northwestern, which were only partly offset by the declines in the Southern iron stocks. The smallest of the declines in railroads was that of 6¼ points in Colorado Southern and the largest the 70-point drop in Great Northern, while the extremes in the industrials were the 4 point decline in National Biscuit preferred and the 48⅜ points loss in Sloss-Sheffield Steel and Iron.

Told 'Round the Ticker.

GEORGE W. ELY, who after a lapse of six years was last week elected to his old place as Secretary of the Stock Exchange, took his place on Thursday. There have been many changes since he resigned as Secretary in 1899. The Exchange was then in its old building, and the Secretary had to be a member. This latter requirement was, it is understood, abrogated so as to permit of Mr. Ely's re-election to his old office. Mr. Ely is said to have been not favored by fortune during the last few years. His friends say that he never was a good speculator, but that as an authority on technical questions of business as, for instance, on questions regarding the delivery of stocks, what was and what was not a good delivery, he has never been surpassed. His rulings on such points during the years from 1883 to 1899 that he was Secretary were rarely questioned and hardly ever set aside, so general was the recognition of his integrity and authority.

CLEMENT B. ASBURY, who formerly represented John H. Davis & Co. on the arbitrage rail, has left that firm and has associated himself with the Stock Exchange firm of J. N. Brown & Co. at 5 Nassau Street, in which firm he has become a partner. He represents this firm as arbitrageur on the floor, and he has retained practically the same connections in London that he heretofore represented.

ALFRED L. NORRIS, the baseball and golf playing member of the Stock Exchange, was coming to town the other day on the Long Island Railroad annex boat which runs to Wall Street when the slip where it was supposed to land was found jammed with other craft. So the Captain made a temporary landing at the next pier, and some fifty men leaped off the boat to the pier expecting to make land without trouble. But unfortunately the doors of the iron structure covering the pier were locked, and no one came to open them. The disappointed crowd then went back for the boat, but this had in the meantime effected a landing at its own pier, discharged its passengers, and sailed away. The men had to make their way along the bulwark along the side of the pier, and some of them found it ticklish business, for there was not much space. Norris, who is short and stout, could not get through a hole through which they had to crawl to reach dry land, and it took some shoving, pulling, and squeezing to get him through. When he finally set foot on the pavement he drew a long breath and exclaimed: "Now I know why old John R. is so scared of having to squeeze through a needle's eye."

ARTHUR HOUSMAN, who was also on the boat, was invited to try his luck and climb up the gang plank, which was tilted at an [illegible]

FRIEDRICH NACHOD of Leipsic, senior member of the firm of Knauth, Nachod & Kuhne, the bankers, and who is known in his city under the title of Commerzienath, sailed for home last week after an extended visit to this country.

THEODORE H. PRICE, the cotton operator, executed another one of his "pas seuls" last week. After writing and sending out all kinds of bullish "dope" he came out shortly after the noon hour on Friday with an announcement that he had sold out all his long cotton. There was a decline on the announcement, and on this decline Mr. Price is said to have bought back all his cotton, or a large part of it. The result of the recent bull campaign has been to put the entire South on the long side, and when Mr. Price's switch was telegraphed down to the Southern Exchanges they wired back that they would make him feel sorry he had ever switched, and they would take all the cotton offered until, as they put it, "the cows came home." Generally, when the South is long, cotton takes a slump.

E. L. NORTON, formerly of Street & Norton, the firm that obtained so much notoriety during the Northern Pacific corner in 1901, will make his headquarters hereafter at the office of G. Clinton Miller & Co., and S. L. Blood, who was last week reinstated to membership, will be with Borman & Co. The firm of Morse & Moore has been dissolved, and a new firm, Morse, Moore & Moore, will succeed it. The new partner is D. Thomas Moore.

EDWIN M. BULKLEY of Spencer Trask & Co., and who is a Trustee and Treasurer of the Moody Schools, near Northfield, left yesterday with other Trustees in a special car to inspect the Northfield Seminary for Young Women and the Mount Hermon Boys' School. Others in the party were Stephen Baker, Henry E. Mallory, Edwin Thorne, and Robert E. Speer. The party will be joined by delegations from Boston and other cities, and will be taken charge of by William R. Moody, chief executive of the schools.

ALBERT STERN sailed for Europe last Tuesday, leaving his place in the bond crowd to George Briggs Buchanan. Mr. Buchanan had previously been initiated into this particularly conservative group of members and for a time he was under the impression that being initiated into the bond crowd was very much like being initiated into the Stock Exchange itself all over again. He has since, metaphorically speaking, been standing on his head most of the time, although even in this uncomfortable posture he has been able to transact considerable business to the satisfaction of his customers.

PHILIP O. MILLS, who was recently elected to membership in the Stock Exchange, wandered from its sacred precincts the other day to execute an order in 500 shares of Northern Securities. It was, in fact, one of the first orders that had come to him and he wanted to see for himself how things were done on the curb. He entered the Northern Securities crowd just as Norman De Mauriac was offering stock at 167⅜. Mr. Mills stood by a moment, and then offered to buy 500 shares. "At five-eighths?" said De Mauriac. "[illegible] can't take them at any order is to buy

FRANCHISE TAX STATUS.

Supreme Court Decision Expected Monday—Belief That State Law Will Be Sustained.

The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the franchise tax case, it is expected by lawyers who have taken a prominent part in the case, will be handed down to-morrow, thus bringing to an end what may be called the first stage in the franchise tax litigation. The points made before the Supreme Court by the attorneys for the corporations were that the tax was a violation of the charter contracts of the several companies, that it was an impairment of their vested rights, and that it operated as a denial to the corporations of equal protection of the laws. So far as may be judged from the informal expressions of those not directly connected with the matter, but who are in a position to know the expectations of some of the corporations which appealed to the Supreme Court, it is not thought likely that the decision will be in their favor. In the course of the case of the Metropolitan Street Railway, which is now before the Supreme Court, the corporation was successful only in the Appellate Division of the State Supreme Court, all other decisions, including the original decision of Referee Earl, having sustained the contention of the State that the special franchise tax was properly imposed and was collectible by the State. If unexpectedly the decision should be against the State, invalidating the assessments that have been levied on special franchises for the past five years, the corporations would profit greatly, particularly those that have made specific preparations to meet the franchise tax should it be upheld. If the expected happens, and the Supreme Court supports the decision of the State Court of Appeals, it is thought that many steps are still open to the corporations, which, though they may not lead to a removal of the tax, will much reduce the amount that the State can collect. It is intimated that there are offsets of one nature or another that the tax assessors will have to recognise in the practical application of the law, and that if these are not granted to the satisfaction of the corporations, as there seems to be no expectation that they will be, further litigation will ensue that conceivably may last as long as that which will end with the handing down of the decision of the Supreme Court on the question of the constitutionality of the law.

That decision will settle the principle involved in the levying of this tax on special franchises, but it cannot be expected to settle details, and these may well take several years more to decide. This much is to be said of the cases of the corporations—if the decision is against them—that they have all to gain and nothing to lose by further litigation, for all that can happen would be a reduction of the taxes that in the end they may be compelled to pay. The aggregate assessments on special franchises for the year 1904 were $302,688,757, an increase of $17,880,165 over the assessments of the previous year. The total assessments in the State for the five years since the enactment of the franchise tax law amount roughly to about $1,500,000,000, the gross amount in taxes due being estimated at $30,000,000.

The history of the litigation in the franchise tax cases is briefly as follows: The law was passed in the Spring of 1899, and was signed by Gov. Roosevelt on May 26. Following the taking out of writs of certiorari by the corporations, the matter was referred to Judge Earl as referee. In May, 1902, he decided against the companies in all respects, except that he ordered a reduction of 33 per cent. in the assessments in order to make the assessments on franchise bear the same proportion to full value as in the case of real estate. The corporations upon the approval of Referee Earl's report by Justice Herrick of the Supreme Court took appeal to the Appellate Division, which decided that the law was unconstitutional, inasmuch as it provided that the assessments should be levied by the State instead of by the local Assessors. In April, 1903, the Court of Appeals reversed the Appellate Division and sustained in toto the report of Referee Earl. On writs of error taken out in June, 1903, the corporations took the case to the Supreme Court of the United States, before which it was argued on April 19 last.

THE BANK STATEMENT.

Reduction in Loans Due Apparently to Japanese Bond Financing.

Yesterday's bank statement reversed or corrected the statement of the previous week to the extent of nearly 50 per cent. of the loan increase reported on May 20. That increase was largely due to the financing of the Pennsylvania bond issue, and the readjustment of the operations connected with that financing probably accounts for part of yesterday's reduction in deposits and loans. Other factors of importance, however, and perhaps controlling ones in the past week's statement, were the operations connected with the Japanese loan flotation, which was settled last week by the payment of the final installment due on the bonds. It is said that a large part of the proceeds of this loan has already been remitted to Europe. In all probability considerable sums were borrowed for the purpose of purchasing bills of exchange in anticipation of the final payment by subscribers to the bonds, and when this payment was made these loans were paid off. Of course, many subscribers borrowed funds to make the payment, but the net result of the operation would normally be a reduction in loans. The decrease in deposits yesterday amounted to $10,022,500. The reduction in requirements, added to a small increase in cash, resulted in a gain of $3,245,825 in surplus reserve, bringing that item up to $11,465,800. At this time last year the surplus stood at $39,602,325.

The items of last week's bank statement, the changes from the preceding week, and the statement of May 28, 1904, follow:

NORTHWESTERN HARMONY

Considerations Regarding the Permanence of the Deal.

QUESTIONS TO BE SETTLED

Speculators Disappointed Over Omitted Problems—St. Paul's Plans Suggested.

To the impartial observer last week's developments in the much-talked-of Northwestern railroad situation must appear as bearing a very close resemblance to the old story of the mountain and the mouse. The gigantic battle between great railroad systems and the foremost financiers with which Wall Street has been frightening itself for years past, which is supposed to have shaken the stock market in its very foundations, now appears to have been, if we take official assertions, nothing more than a squabble as to who should build a branch railroad into the so-called Clearwater district. The branch will not be more than 300 miles long at the very outside, and from the appearances of the map it is not of supreme importance, because other lines already tap the country, which covers about 300 square miles. This is not a very large area, as distances and sizes in the West go, and, although it is said to be extremely rich farming land, it is hardly a big enough territory to cause sensible, conservative, and experienced railroad men to fly to arms over it. But, even granting that it is of greater importance because of a possible strategic position, if it have any, yet it would appear somewhat dwarfed beside the greater question of transcontinental traffic and railroad combinations and control, of which it may be said to be a small constituent part.

This view of the matter appears to have been taken by Wall Street in general and the market in particular. After the latter had been carried off its feet by the mysterious predictions of a settlement of the entire Northwestern dispute it came to its senses very fast when it found out what the settlement was about. Wall Street is rash and enthusiastic, but it is also skeptical, and after it had looked the settlement story squarely in the face it began to think and it remembered a few things which had been told to it not so very long ago. It remembered expressions of opinion by both of the so-called Hill and Harriman factions regarding the other, expressions which were of such emphatic nature that they seemed to be rooted deeper than in the mere question as to who should build the Clearwater line. It remembered further that the struggle over the control of the Northern Pacific was not made in order to settle the Clearwater dispute, which during the last five years had dropped out of sight until it was resurrected a few days ago. It remembered these things and many others and it wondered that it should be possible for the principals in the wrangle to forget what they had said about each other so soon.

Wall Street, having remembered these things also, bethought itself that this settlement left out of consideration the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, the Chicago Northwestern, and the Chicago Great Western, to say nothing of a few smaller lines, all of which were and still are deeply concerned in the Northwestern railroad situation. The building of the Clearwater line jointly by the Union Pacific and Northern Pacific does not solve the question of the western extension of the St. Paul. This road is still bottled up east and west, and its place in the railroad map has not yet been definitely fixed. It is very generally accepted among bankers and railroad men that the only solution for the St. Paul is to buy an existing line to the coast or to build one. The former is declared to be too expensive. The latter is likely to invite the opposition of other railroads, though probably not that of the Hill lines, for Mr. Hill has repeatedly given utterance to the statement that he would welcome the St. Paul or any other road at Puget Sound, the more the merrier, on the theory that competition develops business and that to open new country develops the entire country's productive and consuming capacity.

To speak of a complete settlement of the Northwestern Railroad situation without taking the destination of the other lines and systems into consideration is a little extravagant. It is possible, however, that the principals interested in the affair have not yet announced more than a minor detail of the whole settlement scheme. In this connection the fact that Mr. Harriman will resign the active management of the Union Pacific is taken in some quarters to be of more significance than has been officially admitted. Perhaps it is part of a plan for amity. Perhaps it has been agreed to permit the St. Paul to build to the coast without opposition, perhaps the Great Western has secured promises of a consideration of its claims in the near future, and perhaps the claims of other lines have been similarly considered. So far as the St. Paul is concerned, the belief that it has been drawn into the agreement is strengthened by very definite reports which come from the West to the effect that negotiations are under way for the acquisition at receivers' sale by the St. Paul of the Dakota, Wyoming and Missouri River Railroad, commonly known out in the Dakotas as the "Dusty and Windy," because its construction has cost a lot of money, and because, in spite of these expenses, it has been only partially completed. The road runs from Rapid City, S. D., westward to Mystic, through the Black Hills, and southeast to a point on the White River, where it could be easily connected up with the new extension from Chamberlain which the St. Paul is building. The Dakota, Wyoming and Missouri River is graded along its entire length, and the track has been laid for a considerable part of the road. It touches valuable coalfields, and is said to have used the only remaining pathway through the Black Hills that was open for use by a railroad. Acquisition of this property would bring the St. Paul well into Wyoming through hitherto slightly developed but exceedingly rich land.

Until further announcements regarding the plans of the various systems are made Wall Street will probably assume a skeptical attitude toward all stories of a completely re-established harmonious relationship between the interests in the Northwest that have been at odds.

Baldwin Fund Now $143,083.

Jacob H. Schiff, treasurer of the William H. Baldwin memorial fund, reports that the receipts for the fund to date amount to $143,083.73, which is within $7,000 of the $150,000 and expenses which the promoters of the memorial are anxious to obtain before the books are closed. THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Dull and Strong; Call Money Nominal, 2¼@2½%.

The Market Lethargic in Lack of Any Reasons for Activity—Good Bank Statement.

Business upon the Stock Exchange yesterday responded excellently to manifold reasons for inactivity. The Russian Admiral seems to be meeting his worthy foe in a place and manner to compel a fight speedily. Until the result is known it is poor policy to make new commitments in a situation already confused, and preceding a holiday, with European settlements approaching. Doubtless compelling causes might have stimulated activity even under such conditions, but nothing of the kind developed, the day being as barren of news as of business, and that is saying much, for the volume was the year's smallest. The price changes were mostly narrow, and advances prevailed. In the bond market the activity and strength in Burlington 4 per cents. continued, and Green Bay Bs rose nearly three points upon large business.

The bank statement provided its usual surprise in the shape of a decrease of loans by—$9,423,000. The resultant decrease of reserves required turns an actual increase of reserves of $740,000 into an increase of surplus by $3,245,835. This is a singular result in a week which included the final payment upon the Japanese loan. Argumentatively we might expect a further increase of surplus based upon the payment this week of the American Smelters' subscription. The widow's cruse or the juggler's top hat is not in it compared with the bank reserves in case of necessity. It is fortunate, for the surplus is now only about 1 per cent. of the loans, and running back through a series of years the ratio is seen to rule much larger. It does not follow that the banking situation is any less stable, for there are concealed reserves not formerly available. For example, the payment of the Pennsylvania bond call provided a large amount of funds not immediately wanted, and which were deposited with the trust companies. The theory may be propounded that they were thus enabled to grant accommodations which provided for the repayment of the loans which supposititiously furnished the credit for payments upon the Pennsylvania call, causing an apparent rather than actual reduction of the loans outstanding. Increases and decreases of loans by the ten million serve to illustrate how little the bank statement reveals.

TRADING IN BALTIMORE.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, May 27.—There is good authority for the report that the United Railways situation will be cleared or at least some understanding arrived at between the conflicting interests in the next few weeks. There may be no actual announcement of a plan for refinancing the company until Fall, for the reason that under the conditions prevailing in the stock market the time is not propitious for making new financial arrangements on any large scale. There is, however, an understanding between the income bondholders' protective committee and the stockholders which indicates a settlement. Alexander Brown, of the holding committee of pooled stock, admits that New York parties have made an offer for the property, but says it will not be considered.

The market was dull but firm to-day. Coast Line 4s were still below the ruling price in New York. The sales were: shares, 358; bonds, $20,800, as follows:

ON THE LONDON 'CHANGE

Operations Limited Pending the Expected Naval Battle.

Belief That There Would Have Been a Distinct Upward Movement but for the Timidity Due to the Progress of the Baltic Fleet.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
[Copyright, 1905.]

LONDON, May 27.—This has been a Rojestvensky week on the Stock Exchange, few caring to invest or speculate in advance of the expected collision between the Russian Admiral and Admiral Togo. The feeling has been that a great naval battle in the Far East is likely to produce important price changes here and on the Continental Bourses.

It is thought that there would be a distinct upward movement in stocks in this market but for the timidity growing out of the movements of the Baltic Fleet. Some support for this view is to be found in the course taken by consols, which, in spite of adverse political considerations, advanced somewhat over last week's closing prices.

There were also advances in several other gilt-edged securities the movements of which are usually influenced by consols. It is noticeable, too, that in the foreign department there was an increase in firmness, accompanied in some instances by an upward turn in prices.

British rails, sensitive, as usual, to traffic returns, made a poor showing, there being nothing encouraging in the reports of the operations of the principal English, Irish, and Scotch lines.

Americans followed the course of the New York market to a large extent, and the quotation tables show few stocks which have not gained since Monday, though it is understood that the trading has been on a very limited scale.

The "Kafir Circus" continued in a state of extreme dullness.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, May 27.—Money was abundant in the market to-day and the demand was moderate. Discounts were steady.

Trading on the Stock Exchange was dull and prices were steady. Business was confined to leveling accounts prior to the carryover on Monday. Consols were a fraction easier.

Americans opened firm and prices were maintained throughout at about parity. After a meagre amount of business the market closed quiet. The feature was the continued strength of New York, Ontario and Western on manipulation rumors.

Foreigners were neglected.

Imperial Japanese Government 6s of 1904 were quoted at 101½.

Bar silver steady at 27¼d per ounce.

Money, 1¼@1½ per cent.

The rate of discount in the open market for short bills is 2⅛ per cent.; for three months' bills, 2¼ per cent.

The amount of bullion taken into the Bank of England on balance to-day was £8,000.

Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Madrid, 31.80; Lisbon, 8.50.

PARIS, May 27.—Prices on the Bourse to-day opened firm, owing to New York advices, but at the closing the market generally was dull as a result of the weakness of gold mines. Russian imperial 4s were quoted at 80.07 and Russian bonds of 1904 at 504.

CHICAGO QUOTATIONS.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 27.—New York exchange to-day was 10 cents premium. Time and call loans, 3¼@4½ per cent.

Further bullish tactics in Chicago Subway shares were apparent. In New York a financial news agency sent out what purported to be a forecast of the immediate speculative future of the stock, suggesting higher prices. Locally at the start twenty shares went at the new high level of 65. Some profit taking was apparent, and the price fell a point. Later there was further favor, and the shares, after selling again at 64¾, closed at 64½.

Elsewhere business was dull and the price trend lower. Can preferred sold off to 65¾. Shipbuilding dropped 3 points from Thursday's price and sold at 49¾. Title and Trust eased on a small sale, and Quaker Oats lost a point. Street's preferred rose to 101. The list follows:

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 27.—United Gas Improvement, after an early decline to-day to 101, rallied to 103, on the report that it would withdraw its offer for an extension of the lease of the city gas works. This, with some weakness in Philadelphia Rapid Transit and good buying of Philadelphia Electric, were the only features. Trading was very slow, and commission house business seemed to be at a standstill. The total sales were 17,320 shares, $88,500 bonds, as follows:

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 27.—United Gas Improvement, after an early decline to-day to 101, rallied to 103, on the report that it would withdraw its offer for an extension of the lease of the city gas works. This, with some weakness in Philadelphia Rapid Transit and good buying of Philadelphia Electric, were the only features. Trading was very slow, and commission house business seemed to be at a standstill. The total sales were 17,320 shares, $88,500 bonds, as follows:

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

The outcome of the sale of the Bathgate-Beck property was for several reasons highly satisfactory, even though it did not yield remarkably high prices or produce any mad scramble on the part of the general public for the lots—sometimes regarded as the essential features of a successful auction.

Indeed, that prices were not remarkably high, but were such as will admit possibly of some further profit, and certainly of the profitable improvement of the property, was a result greatly to be desired. Nothing, not even a flat failure of the offering, would have been more disastrous to the real estate situation in the Bronx than the sale of the lots at record prices, with the strong probability that disgruntled buyers would make themselves heard at every mention of Bronx property for the next two or three years.

That prices were below the boom figures of six months ago, when speculation spread to land far from the lines of development, was not surprising. That, however, these 300 lots should be taken over at fair valuations by those operators who are closely in touch with surrounding conditions, argues much for the strength of the Bronx situation and ought to do much toward restoring that confidence in its properties which suffered considerably by reason of the wild-cat speculation of last Fall.

The results of auction sales of improved parcels in Manhattan were no less fortunate. A corner at Eighth Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street was sold for $140,000; the city's upset prices for seven properties valued at over $500,000 were exceeded in every instance, and the success of the Snyder estate offering was limited only by the fact that three of the parcels had been sold at private sale. Such occurrences as this only strengthen one's belief that there is little or no risk on the part of owners in putting up of properties at auction—provided, of course, that the properties have anything to recommend them. The forestalling of auctions by private purchases is becoming noticably more frequent, and the only conclusion which it invites is that buyers are becoming convinced that in the case of desirable offerings they can actually get better bargains through private negotiations than through auction room competition.

The week's business among brokers has reflected the same well diversified demand that has pervaded the market since the decline in lot speculation. The upper east side, perhaps, is contributing more than its fair share of the smaller transactions in flats and apartment houses, although in the westerly section of Harlem and on the lower end of Washington Heights there are apparently plenty of buyers for recently completed structures. Individual transactions of importance were not numerous, aside from the sale of the southeast corner of Fifth Avenue and Eighty-seventh Street, as the site for a new residence, and deals for two corners on Lower Madison Avenue at Twenty-eighth and Thirty-second Streets.

LATEST DEALINGS BY BROKERS.

Horace S. Ely & Co. have sold for Mrs. Sarah A. T. Fay the Pearsall Building, on lot 25 by 122, at 28 Cortlandt Street, northwest corner of Church Street. The property has been bought by the Hudson Companies and completes the site for the Manhattan terminal of the Cortlandt Street tunnel to Jersey City.

"Al" Adams Buys a Corner.

Pocher & Co. have sold the northeast corner of Sixty-eighth Street and Columbus Avenue, a five-story apartment house, on lot 30 by 100, to Albert J. Adams.

Hotel Near Circle Changes Hands.

The Manhattan Realty Corporation has sold for B. F. Champion to William F. Bangs & Brother the lease of the Hotel Le Barton at Fifty-eighth Street and Eighth Avenue, covering a term of twenty years at an aggregate rental of about $400,000.

Buyer of Riverside Dwelling.

Harry L. Toplitz is the buyer of the dwelling 38 Riverside Drive. E. A. Turner was the broker in the deal.

Slawson & Hobbs have sold for Clara J. McDonald to a client, for occupancy, the four-story brownstone dwelling 311 West Eighty-eighth Street, 18 by 58 by 100.

S. C. and G. S. Boehm have sold to Amelia Steinof to Jacob Weinstein 31 West Ninety-fifth Street, a three-story dwelling, on lot 17.6 by 100.8.

S. C. and G. S. Boehni have sold to Matthias Wiler 253 West One Hundred and Thirty-seventh Street, a five-story American-basement dwelling, on lot 18 by 99.11.

Buying Lenox Avenue Apartments.

Arnold & Byrne have sold for Julia Levy to George E. Faile the northwest corner of One Hundred and Thirty-eighth Street and Lenox Avenue, a five-story apartment house.

Aldhous & Co. have sold to Frederick Levy the five-story flat 523 Lenox Avenue.

Widmayer & Co. have sold for Oppermann & Woytisek 2,469 and 2,471 Seventh Avenue, a five-story triple flat, 38 by 100; also, for B. King, 116 West One Hundred and Sixteenth Street, a five-story flat, 25 by 100; also, for a Mr. Lederer, 222 West One Hundred and Forty-third Street, a five-story double flat, 25 by 100; also, for I. Oppenheim, 430 West One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Street, a five-story triple flat, 25 by 100.

Vogel & Co. have resold 207 West One Hundred and Ninth Street, a five-story triple flat, 25 by 85 by 100.

Kuppenheim & Lowenfeld negotiated the sale of the two five-story double flats 110 and 112 West One Hundred and Fourth Street, each 30.6 by 100.11, for the Snyder estate to Adolf Mandel.

THE AUCTION ROOMS.

In view of last week's successes in the auction room, Tuesday's holiday is probably responsible for the generally meagre character of this week's schedule of offerings. The only business listed for tomorrow is the sale of George A. Carroll & Co. at the Bronx Salesroom, involving twelve vacant parcels in that borough, among which are plots on Marion Avenue, near One Hundred and Eighty-ninth Street, and on Webster Avenue, near One Hundred and Seventy-ninth Street.

Other Bronx offerings, to be conducted at the Vesey Street room, include the northeast corner of Elton Avenue and One Hundred and Sixtieth Street and 762 East One Hundred and Fifty-eighth Street, with the sale on Wednesday of [illegible] Street, and on Thursday [illegible]

Fordham Landing Road, adjoining the approach to the new bridge across the Harlem River; the southeast corner of Washington Avenue and St. Paul's Place, and a plot on Washington Avenue, near One Hundred and Sixty-ninth Street.

A valuable Washington Heights parcel will be sold on Thursday by Bryan L. Kennelly, consisting of six lots at the southwest corner of Broadway and One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Street, with an adjoining lot at the rear. By order of the Rapid Transit Commission Auctioneer Kennelly will also offer on the same day a plot, 184 by 200, running through from Eleventh to Hillside Avenue, just south of the northerly portal of the Washington Heights tunnel.

The Memorial Day sale of the Jere Johnson, Jr., Company involves 382 lots near Richmond Hill in the Borough of Queens, on Jamaica Avenue, Wyckoff and Park Avenues, Union Place, and intersecting streets. This property, which is owned by the Columbia Finance and Trust Company of Louisville, is likely to derive much benefit, not only from the projected tunnels under the East River, but also from the Atlantic Avenue improvements of the Long Island Railroad in Brooklyn.

Another offering announced for the holiday is that of seventy-three acres at New Rochelle, facing the Boston Post Road and on the line of the proposed electric express lines into Westchester County. The property was formerly owned by C. Oliver Iselin, but is now held by the Sound Shore Realty and Title Company. Part of it will be sold in lots and the rest in acreage tracts. The sale will be conducted by H. E. Colwell.

DECORATION DAY OUTING.

You are cordially invited to join us to visit the next boom suburb of Greater New York,

RICHMOND HILL, L. I.

Just the place for a man of moderate means to get a start—perhaps lay a foundation to a fortune. No large amount is required—$25 or $50 down will secure one or more choice lots.

Richmond Hill is but 15 minutes from 34th Street Ferry—half as far from the business section of Manhattan as the Bronx is. Macadamized streets with shade trees, large schools, water, gas—in fact, every city improvement. No better place to build a home.

Few Manhattanites are aware of the fact that the southern terminal of the New York Subway will be at Flatbush Station, Brooklyn, by way of tunnels from the Battery Park under the East River, there making a connection with the Atlantic Ave. Rapid Transit road, the tunnels of which are about completed now. Next year you will be able to travel by way of the Battery to Richmond Hill in 20 minutes. Investors of to-day will double and treble their money, as investors in Bronx property did last year when the Subway was opened.

Do not buy property miles out when you can obtain our Richmond Hill lots for $250, $300 and $350 on easy terms.

¶ If the great trees that now shade the lawns of Palisade could speak they would recall those days of more than a century and a quarter ago when Washington and his soldiers camped under their spreading boughs.

¶ That was long since, but the forest trees still stand guard over the site of that encampment—still stand an undying monument to the memories of the past.

¶ You can plan no more enjoyable trip for Memorial Day than a visit to Palisade—the great bluffs that overlook the Hudson, the shaded lawns, the forest-clad promontories and the beautiful houses that have been built among these ideal surroundings.

¶ Then you will realize what it means to live in Palisade—will abandon your confined city quarters and move to this, the garden spot of the East.

¶ Aside from its historic associations Palisade offers you not only a real home but an investment of the highest value.

Houses range in price from $10,000 to $30,000—some a trifle less. A beautiful descriptive book is yours for the asking.

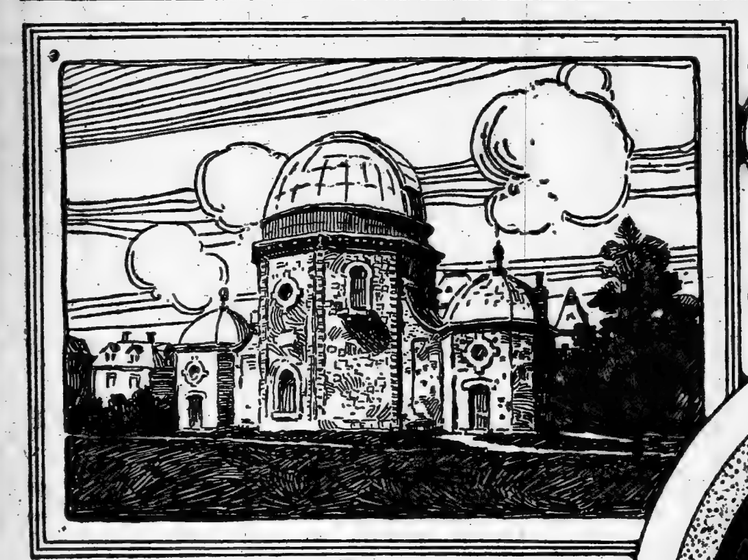
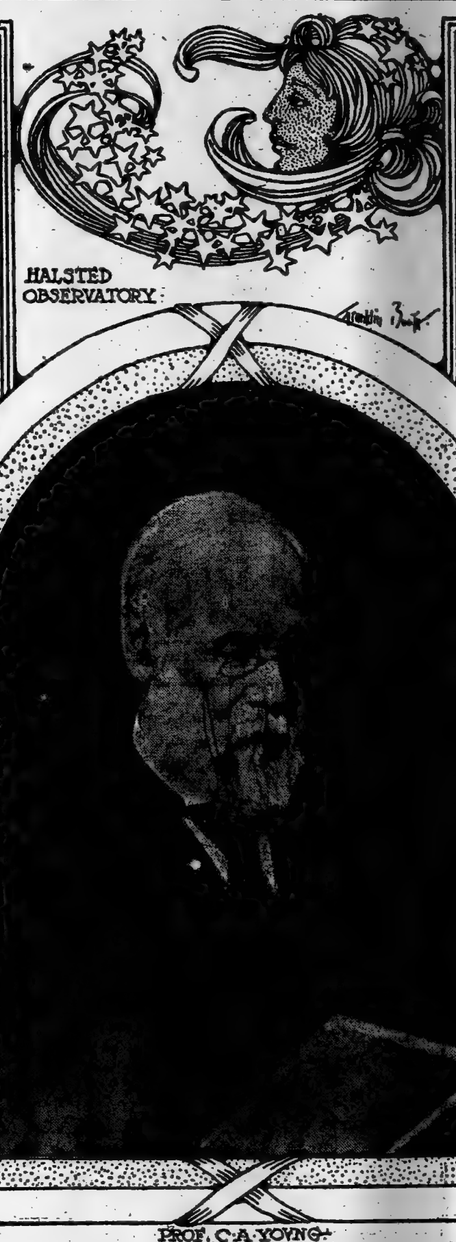
What Science Owes to Professor Young

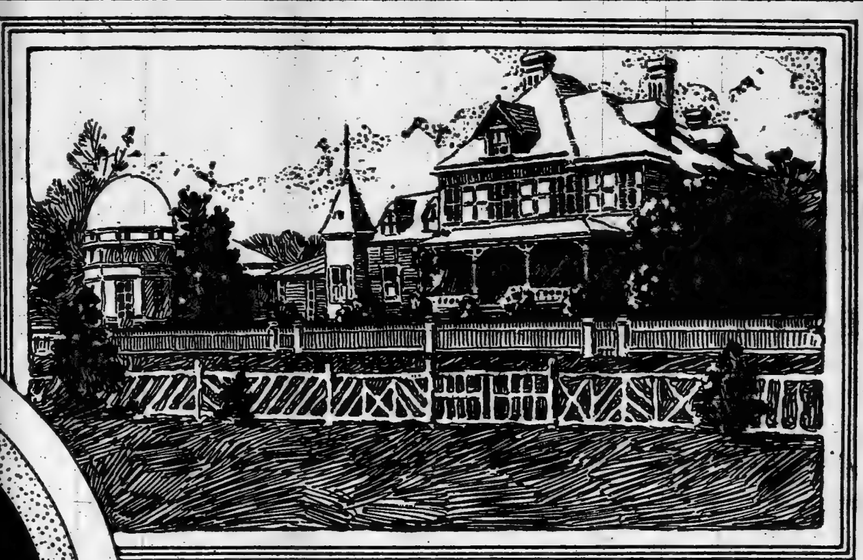
Retirement From Active Work of Princeton's Famous and Much Loved Astronomer.

BY MARY PROCTOR.





HALSTED OBSERVATORY



PROF. C. A. YOUNG

For Over Half a Century Prof. Young Has Sought to Make the Study of Astronomy Popular---His Name a Household Word with Every Star-Lover---Richard A. Proctor's Daughter, Who Visited Him Last Week, Gives a Brief but Interesting Survey of His Brilliant Career.

I KNOW I am mortal and the creature of a day. Yet when I search the close set whirling circles of the stars no longer do I stand with feet upon the earth, but, seated with Jove himself, I take my fill of the breath of heaven."

These words in Greek were inscribed on a loving cup presented to Prof. Charles A. Young at a banquet given at Princeton Inn a few days ago as a testimonial of the appreciation of his colleagues. The astronomer will retire from active work in June, after twenty-eight years of service in Princeton University. Practically fifty-two years of his life have been spent in teaching astronomy, and his chief aim has been to make it popular, which he has undoubtedly succeeded in doing. His inspiring influence as a teacher has not been limited to his own classroom, for he is widely known by means of his series of textbooks on astronomy.

The sale of these books up to the present time, amounting to about 120,000, is an indication of their well-known merit and unique popularity. The following is a partial list of the books written by Prof. Young since 1882: "The Sun," a second edition of which was published in 1898; "General Astronomy," of which 26,000 copies have been sold up to date; "Elements of Astronomy," sale 39,000; "Lessons in Astronomy," sale 53,000; "Manual of Astronomy," sale 5,000, &c. He has also published more than 200 papers of all sizes, from extended articles of 20 pages or more down to single-page notes. The long articles have been for the most part popular in character.

While at Dartmouth, where he was Professor of Natural Philosophy and Astronomy, from 1866 to 1877, he took up solar spectroscopy with considerable success in the observation of prominences and sun-spots. He was the first in 1873 to use the diffraction grating in solar spectroscopy. While at Princeton he continued the work sporadically, and in 1891 was first to recognize vanadium as prominent in the sun-spot spectrum. In fact, Prof. Young is specially renowned for his investigations in solar physics.

During the course of his busy life he has found time to give lecture courses of from four to ten lectures each, at the Lowell Institute, Boston; thirteen university extension courses in various places, and since 1870 as nearly as can be estimated, about a hundred single lectures not in courses. At Mount Holyoke Seminary, new Mount Holyoke College, he has lectured annually on physics and astronomy, (alternate years,) from 1868 to 1883, and has lectured there on astronomy biennially, from 1883 to 1903. He has also lectured at Bradford Academy, Mass., biennially, from 1872 to 1898; Wheaton Seminary, Norton, Mass., from 1882 to 1897, and Miss Porter's School, Farmington, Conn., from 1890 to 1898.

Meanwhile he has taken an active part in several eclipse expeditions, the first being the eclipse of 1869, at Burlington, Iowa. On this occasion he found the bright line in the corona spectrum. At the eclipse of Dec. 22, 1870, visible in Jerez, Spain, he found the spectrum of the "reversing layer," in recognition of which discovery he received the Janssen medal in 1891.

The eclipse of Dec. 22, 1870, though lasting only two minutes and ten seconds, drew observers from all parts of the world to the shores of the Mediterranean. Janssen issued from beleaguered Paris in a balloon, carrying with him the important parts of a reflector specially constructed to collect evidence about the corona. But he reached Oran only to find himself shut behind a cloud-curtain more impervious than the Prussian lines. Everywhere the sky was more or less [illegible]. Sir Norman Lockyer of the [illegible] and was shipwrecked on the way. When he finally succeeded in reaching his destination he was recompensed with a glimpse of the solar aureole during one second and a half! Three parties stationed at various heights on Mount Etna saw absolutely nothing. Nevertheless important information was obtained in despite of the elements.

The prominent event was Prof. Young's discovery of the "reversing layer." This beautiful phenomenon, superbly seen for the first time at Jerez de la Frontera in Spain, he describes as follows: "As the moon advances, making narrower and narrower the remaining sickle of the solar disk, the dark lines of the spectrum for the most part remain sensibly unchanged, though becoming somewhat more intense. A few, however, begin to fade out, and some even turn palely bright a minute or two before the totality begins. But the moment the sun is hidden, through the whole length of the spectrum, the red, the green, the violet, the bright lines flash out by hundreds and thousands, almost startlingly; as suddenly as stars from a bursting rocket-head, and as evanescent, for the whole thing is over within two or three seconds. The layer seems to be only something under a thousand miles in thickness, and the moon's motion covers it very quickly."

The theory regarding this so-called "reversing layer" was disputed by Sir Norman Lockyer, and in a letter addressed to the editor of Nature, from Klo Island, off the western coast of Norway, previous to the eclipse of Aug. 9, 1896, he wrote as follows: "A plate will be exposed ten seconds before the end of totality to fifteen seconds after, in the hope of catching the so-called 'flash' which is supposed to represent the 'reversing layer.' To my mind, the reversing layer is dead and buried already, but may the fates be propitious on the 9th and enable us to place a wreath on its tomb."

As it happened, the theory was confirmed, for just at the critical moment Mr. Schackelton, one of Lockyer's own assistants, took a photograph of the "reversing layer," and the photographic plate established its identity forever. Knowing Prof. Young's keen appreciation of a joke, his friend, Mr. Huggins, an English astronomer, wrote to him on hearing of the confirmation of the theory, quoting as appropriate for the occasion the well-known couplet in the story of "Old Mother Hubbard," "who went to the cupboard to get her poor dog a bone." She also

"Went to the joiner to get him a coffin,
And when she came back, the dog was a-laughing."

The observation of the "reversing layer" was again confirmed at the total eclipse of Jan. 22, 1898, when very satisfactory photographs were obtained of the solar spectrum by observers in India. On this occasion Mr. E. Walter Maunder, F. R. A. S., who had made special arrangements for photographing the spectrum of the reversing layer, had a most aggravating experience. In attempting too much, by having too many instruments to attend to without any one to assist him, he found, too late, that one spectroscope which had been exposed during the brief period the reversing layer was visible, was still exposed when the crescent sun came into view. He had forgotten to close the shutter in the hurry of the last moments of totality, and as a result the faint corona spectrum nearly faded outright.

Several partial confirmations of the observations of the flash spectrum have since been visually obtained at eclipses, though none so complete as desirable, but the photographs of the "flash spectrum," as it is now called, (a camera of long focus, with a prism, a train of prisms, or a "grating" outside the object glass,) have fully corroborated it. An exquisite photograph of the flash spectrum was obtained by Sir Norman Lockyer in India during the eclipse of 1898.

Nevertheless, Sir Norman Lockyer has never admitted the existence of any such thin "reversing layer," maintaining that a large proportion of the dark lines are formed only in the regions of lower temperature, high up in the sun's atmosphere, and not close to the photosphere, i. e., different lines of a given substance originate at very different elevations in the solar atmosphere.

The reversing layer forms the densest portion of the lower atmosphere of the chromosphere or color sphere. It is so called because it is brilliantly scarlet, owing the color to hydrogen, of which it is mainly composed. In structure it is like a sheet of flame overlying the surface of the photosphere (or outer shell of the sun) to a depth of from 5,000 to 10,000 miles, and as seen through a telescope at a total eclipse of the sun has been aptly described as "a prairie on fire."

Projecting upward from the chromosphere and moving with a velocity varying from 50 to 200 miles a second, are the solar flames or prominences. They are very beautiful and interesting objects, sometimes presenting the appearance of vast clouds of roseate hue resting on the surface of the sun, the interlacing branches of trees, or jets of spray from a fountain. They change in appearance with marvelous rapidity, and Prof. Young, who has observed hundreds of them, had the following remarkable experience: On Oct. 7, 1880, he was observing a sun-flame which attained the unequaled height of 350,000 miles. (Forty-four globes the diameter of the earth would not quite reach to the tip of this mighty flame.)

When first seen on the southeast limb of the sun, about 10:30 A. M., it was a "horn" of ordinary appearance, some 40,000 miles in elevation, and attracted no special attention. When next seen, half an hour later, it had become very brilliant and had doubled its height; during the next hour it stretched upward until it reached the enormous altitude mentioned, breaking up into filaments which gradually faded away, until by 12:30 P. M. there was nothing left. Telescopic examination of the sun's disk showed nothing to account for such an extraordinary outburst, except some small and not very brilliant faculae.

At the eclipse of 1878, observing parties were scattered all along the line of anticipated darkness in the United States, where, above the Rocky Mountains, the skies were remarkably clear. Located at Cherry Creek Camp, near Denver, was Prof. Young, who took several photo[illegible] with a scale much larger than usual at that time. The Princeton party consisted of about fifteen. The observations were fairly successful.

In 1887 Prof. Young prepared to observe the eclipse near the western end of the eclipse track, a station about 120 miles northeast of Moscow. But the path of this ill-fated eclipse was shrouded in clouds for nearly its entire length, and only a few photographs of the corona were obtained. At the station occupied by Prof. Young and his party of six astronomers a misty rain was falling much of the time during the eclipse. At the middle of the eclipse the darkness was hardly greater than in a heavy thunderstorm; the moment when "totality" began could not be determined with any accuracy at all, and its close was doubtful by some seconds. Fine print could be read all the time.

The last expedition in which Prof. Young took part was in May, 1900, when the Princeton eclipse expedition went to Wade[illegible] N. C. This total eclipse of the [illegible] offering along its track many easily accessible stations with favorable probabilities in respect to weather. Princeton had several times before sent out eclipse observers: In 1834, 1854, 1860, and 1869 Prof. Alexander had made journeys to Georgia, Northern New York, Labrador, and Iowa to observe the eclipses of those years, and in 1878 and 1887 Prof. Young had taken parties to Colorado and Russia on similar errands. It seemed therefore only proper that on this occasion also Princeton should be represented in the field.

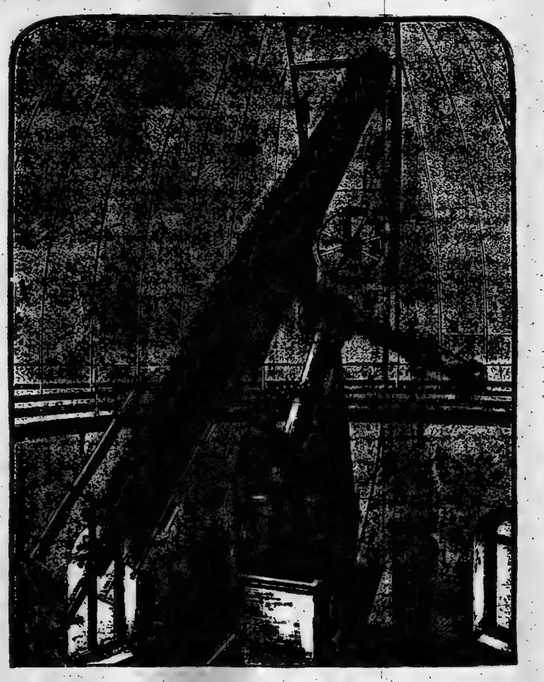
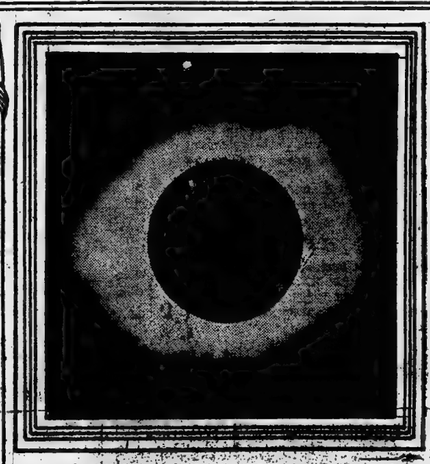
Prof. Young gives this account of their experiences:

"More than a year in advance Wadsborough, N. C., had been fixed upon as our station. A beautiful site for our observation camp was secured just east of the village, within five minutes' walk of the Court House, on the brow of an eminence giving a wide, unbroken view for ten or twenty miles toward the east. Our party, when we left Princeton on May 17, consisted of nine persons, who all participated in the observations of the eclipse.





SOLAR CORONA. TWELVE FT. TELESCOPE. 30 SECONDS EXPOSURE.

OBSERVATORY OF INSTRUCTION AND PROFESSOR YOUNG'S HOUSE

"Our instrumental equipment included the nine-and-a-half-inch equatorial of the School of Science observatory, with its mounting complete except the iron pier; an equatorial mounting carrying three photographic cameras, a four-inch telescope, the three-and-a-half-inch Fraunhofer instrument so long 'the telescope' of Princeton during all the years of Prof. Alexander's service. We also had the spectograph of the Halsted Observatory, an 'analyzing spectroscope,' an 'integrating spectroscope,' and the slitless spectroscope, for observing the 'flash-spectrum' and the coronal rings. We carried, of course, numerous other minor articles of apparatus—a mean-time chronometer, a time counter, a clinometer, various eye pieces, colored glasses, direct-vision prisms, &c., with a full assortment of photographic supplies.

"The morning of the eclipse was cloudless and brilliantly clear. Every one was at his post in good season, and the observations went through without any interruption or mishap. With one exception the observations were successful, and in this failure we only shared the common fate of most of those who on this occasion attempted the same determination. In this case the object aimed at was to determine accurately the position (wave length) of the bright green corona line in the spectrum of the corona. As it happened, the corona was far less brilliant than usual."

Very interesting observations were also made of the shadow bands as they rippled over two tent flies spread on the ground. They first appeared about a minute and a half before totality, and were about two inches in width, wavy and irregular, made up apparently of short, overlapping curves a few inches long. At first moving with the speed of five to seven miles an hour, this increased enormously—to "the velocity of an express train."

In 1874 Prof. Young went to Peking as astronomer of a party headed by Prof. Watson, to observe the transit of Venus. "The special interest of the transits lies in their availability for the purpose of finding the parallax and distance of the sun, as first pointed out by Halley in 1679. A transit takes place when Venus passes between the earth and the sun at inferior conjunction and 'transits,' or crosses, the disk of the sun from east to west as a round black spot, easily seen by the naked eye through a suitable shade glass. When the transit is central it occupies about eight hours, but when the track is near the edge of the disk it is correspondingly shortened."

Prof. Young's observations on this occasion were successful, and again at the transit of Venus in 1882. However, the observations were then made at Princeton, the outfit and methods being the same as those employed by the Government parties, which took up positions scattered over the globe, from Queensland to Bermuda.

In other lines of work Prof. Young has measured the diameter and ellipticity of Mars, Uranus, and Jupiter; made some hundreds of observations of double stars, (not yet published,) and many observa[illegible] work was always made secondary to the work of instruction.

During the Summers of 1859, 1864, and 1865 he was engaged on lake survey. For 100 days during the Summer of 1862, he was Captain of Company B of the Eighty-fifth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, the company being composed mainly of college boys never under fire. In 1870 he was appointed member and Secretary of the Board of Visitors for West Point, and from 1901 to 1903 he was a member and President of the Board of Visitors for the United States Naval Observatory, Washington, D. C. He has also been Trustee of Meriden Academy, New Hampshire, 1867-72; Trustee of Mount Holyoke College since 1880, and Lawrenceville School since 1892.

Prof. Young is a member of innumerable societies, being Vice President of the American Association for the Advancement of Science in 1876, and President in 1883. He is also a member of the Dartmouth Scientific Club, the Princeton Scientific Club, the National Academy of Sciences, the Philosophical Society of Philadelphia, the American Academy of Science and Art, Boston; the Cambridge (England) Philosophical Society, and the Washington Academy of Sciences. He is an honorary member of the New York Academy of Sciences and the Brooklyn Institute, and an associate member of the Royal Astronomical Society of Great Britain and the British Association for the Advancement of Science. He is also a member of the following college societies: Beta Theta Pi, Alpha Delta Phi, and Phi Beta Kappa.

Prof. Young received the degree of Ph.D. at the University of Pennsylvania, 1870, and at Hamilton College, New York, in 1871. He has also received the degree of LL. D. from the Wesleyan University, Connecticut, in 1876; Columbia University, New York, in 1887; Western Reserve University, Ohio, 1893, and Dartmouth College in 1903.

Thus, laden with honors and happy in the assurance that he has done even more than his share in the "world's work," it seems only fair that Prof. Young should now enjoy a well-earned rest. That he will be missed goes without saying, and it is doubtless with a feeling of regret that he leaves Princeton, which has been his home for so many years. Yet he has the consolation of knowing that his work is fully appreciated, this being aptly implied in the closing lines of a poem by Dr. Henry van Dyke, and read by him at the banquet given a few days ago in honor of the ever-popular Princeton astronomer:

"So take our thanks, dear reader of the skies,
Devout astronomer, most humbly wise,
For lessons brighter than the stars can give,
And inward light that helps us all to live.
The world has brought the laurel leaves to crown
The star discoverer's name with high renown;
Accept the flower of love we lay with these,
For influence sweeter than the Pleiades.
For though the hour has come when we must part,
That influence long shall live within our heart,
And we shall know thee traveling on thy way
Into the brightness of a heavenly day."

Prof. Young owns a small house in Hanover, N. H., in which he has been accustomed to spend the Summer, and where he expects to move next July to spend the rest of his life. He will remain connected with Princeton as professor emeritus, with a salary about two-thirds of his present salary.

He is a member of the Congregational Church, and is a Deacon during his residence at Hanover. In fact, he was one year (1855-6) in the Andover Theological Seminary, studying for the ministry, but eventually changed his plans. He fitted for college in the local academy and under private teachers. In Septembes, 1849, he entered Dartmouth College, was graduated A. B. at the head of his class in 1853, and A. M. in 1856.

On Aug. 26, 1857, Prof. Young married Augusta S. Minor of Concord, N. H., who died in Princeton Jan. 18, 1901. There were three children, Clara E., (Mrs. H. A. Hitchcock,) widowed in 1895, and now residing with her father and her son, Charles Y. Hitchcock, aged fourteen; Charles Ira, engineer in the employ of the W[illegible]

What a Ramble Along the Lower Water Front Disclosed to an Inquisitive and Observing Feminine Explorer---A Territory Unknown to Hundreds of Thousands of New Yorkers.

THE woman boarded a commodious open-faced car, found a choice end seat, and sped breezily down a wide sunlit avenue which skirted the west side and the river; passing brilliant fruit stands on her left, and drug stores radiant with variegated bottles, and fetching candy shops; catching glimpses in between streets of imposing tower and turret and pinnacle and glimmer of gold dome apparently Venetian, but in reality topping tall dry goods houses on Sixth Avenue, and on her right catching also between streets ravishing atmospherically tinted etchings of the blue and white Hudson, framed in by the soft dull red brick of ancient buildings, on her way to the river front to see what manner of people lived there, and what they were doing.

Further down the wide avenue narrowed, the Jersey shores melted into sky and cloud, the masts and spars of ships upon the Hudson advanced a pace—and the open-faced car stopped more than once to let some huge wagon heavily laden with bag or barrel lumber across the track and out of the way.

Then it sped on and on and on, past tenement houses out of whose windows bulged airing featherbeds, then further on yet to where upon her right there appeared the tall still masts of great Atlantic greyhounds resting awhile before they started out to sea again, and on her left she skirted giant wholesale houses, the windows of which palely encircled men and women and boys and girls who hardly ever rested and who never went to sea.

The car took many turns, turned many corners, jerked wheel, and wheezed, and at last stopped.

Then an intrepid frozen-faced conductor slammed one pole down and another up, turned all the wide seats facing the other way, and said:

"Get out!"

But the woman who was not yet at her journey's end was loath to get out. She spent some futile moments in arguing with him as to a transfer to the little horse car which was destined to take her the rest of the way.

Nothing doing. She was forced, after all, to pay her extra fare upon that horse car or go afoot. She paid her fare.

Much has been said against the few-and-far-between horse cars in this otherwise up-to-date metropolis, but heretofore nothing in their favor.

As a pedestrian the woman had timidly faced many dangers. She had dodged automobiles, fire engines, ambulances, bicycles, and boys on roller skates; but she wasn't in it so far as timidity went with that horse car.

It was little enough of itself, but two inoffensive and frightened white horses served to add to its insignificance and the right of others to impose upon it. Those horses stopped and waited for things to pass till the woman thought she would never get there. They dodged wagons, big and little; they looked furtively around corners before they dared to go around; they stopped stock still, quivering with fear for people a-foot or horseback to get by, until finally they came to a standstill altogether and she gladly alighted at the river front.

She advanced upon the open and a view of the sea.

A great green park, with many benches and many people sitting thereon, their faces turned delightedly seaward.

It was a very pleasant sight to come unexpectedly upon, out of the rush and whirl and turmoil of the street. Rows of people quietly idling so early in the busy morning, basking in the warm gold sunlight with the green grass growing all around them.

The woman walked swiftly to her right to where some boats were launched, two tugboats with big, soft coils of rope at their prows, a fluff of rope that at a distance looked like a buffalo head, to where a beautiful white boat, shining with cleanliness, surged gently with the roll of the water, its signaling tubes gleaming after the manner of elephantine electric light bulbs in the sun.

She stood near him.

"What is the fine, clean boat?" she asked him.

"That," he said, "is a police patrol boat."

"Do you mean," she queried, "that if the big boats get too gay this little boat will handcuff them and drag them ignominiously off to the station house?"

The boy occupied a moment in reflection, his sad eyes still on the sea.

"Not exactly that," he answered, solemnly, "but something like it. It keeps the big boats in order. It is the Captain. There are a lot of other little policemen boats around ready to come to its assistance whenever it calls them," and, thus explaining, he fell into silence, while the woman just saved herself from falling into the sea by holding on to the rail.

By and by she walked on around the river front at that particular spot, gazing upon the people who stood about everywhere gazing upon the sea.

They were not to be blamed. The sea was very beautiful in the morning sunshine. The little waves broke into bits that had the look of cut glass. The Statue of Liberty gleamed mistily. The boats called out to each other in a neighborly way. The water lapped musically and a strong and pungent odor of salt sifted healthily up from the waves through the sunshine.

She walked slowly on and on past these quiet people. Many were foreigners. Most were foreigners. She thought perhaps with that far-away look in their eyes they were trying to see across to their own country.

She knew how that was.

Many a time she had stood on foreign shores and wished she might see across to the tall gray towers of her beautiful Manhattan, encircled by the sea.

She walked on and on past these wistful idlers, past live statues of policemen, till she came to the immigration bureau of free labor, where the immigrants stand all day long patiently waiting for a job and offering up silent prayers to an indulgent Providence that they may not get one; and after a parting view of the beautiful sea over a bed of glowing pansies passed the immigration landing and a few ferryhouses and an old woman who sold oranges for their weight in gold and a man who sold priceless cherries, coming at last to a dock before which three small boys gleefully turned on a hydrant, trying to flood the surrounding tank and take a surreptitious and much-needed bath.

She stopped and laughed with them at the splashing water till they tried to work a game of graft, holding out wet brown palms to her, begging for nickels.

"Not on your life," she said, "I've got to get home," and left the fun, going on along the dock by the sailboats, one of which, clean and white as scrub brush and paint could make it, rocked a little as it lay in the dark deep water.

The woman had bought one of the expensive oranges. She sat down near this sailboat to eat it. A sunburned man, who had been slowly pacing the deck, came near and stood idly leaning over the rail, looking at her.

He was picturesquely garbed in old dull blue of some sort. His hair was sunburned, done in gorgeous tints by generous tropic suns. He was not the Captain. He was the second mate.

"Where did you come from?" asked the woman, pleasantly, "and where are you going?"

"I came from South America," he answered somewhat indefinitely, "and I am going back there."

The woman peeled her orange and offered him a little piece, which he refused, politely.

"When?" she asked further.

"Next week," he answered.

"What is your cargo?"

"Tea, sugar, and other things."

"What are those great big white barrels in a row on the deck?"

"Barrels for water."

"Never anything else?"

"Never anything but water."

"You never happen then to stop by Kentucky in your travels?" she interrogated, "and take on anything else?"

"Kentucky," he repeated. "Kentucky! What country is that? Is that by the sea?"

His question was worse than hers. She steered into another channel.

"Do you ever take passengers?" she asked him.

"Never," said the second mate.

"Well, then," said she, finishing her orange and throwing the peeling into the water, "I must say good morning and go."

On the same dock were large wagons of iridescent balls of light.

"Scrap tin," the men told her they were. "We are sending them to New Jersey to make window weights of."

Many interesting things that were not at all what she expected them to be adorned those docks. She turned and visited another. There a ship had landed only that morning. It was full of cocoanuts. Sunburned men were throwing these cocoanuts into baskets, others were knocking two at a time together, then pitching them into large gunnysacks which two other men hauled off and put upon a pile ready to be carted away.

"Why do they knock them together so?" she interrogated.

"To see if they are good," he explained. "If a cocoanut isn't good the milk dries up and it sounds hollow. Look here. Here is one that has sprouted," showing her the sprout.

"Will there be a little cocoanut then?" she asked.

"Oh, no! If you let it alone there will be a tree. That's all."

"But suppose," she objected, "they started out from South America with a carload of cocoanuts and landed in New York with a carload of trees!"

The well-dressed man looked at her earnestly.

"They couldn't do that," said he, "because they wouldn't have time enough to grow. It only takes ten days for the boat to make the trip," he added smilelessly.

The woman gave him a sad look of farewell, and shook the dust of his vicinity from her skirts and shoes.

At still another dock were some flatboats, so flat they hardly lifted their heads up out of the water. She stopped by one. Another sunburned man smiled at her, as if to ask what she wanted.

"These are canalboats," he said when she had put her question. "They ply between New York and Buffalo."

"There are no sails. What drives them along?"

"We go by steam from here to Albany, then the mules haul us to Buffalo."

At that moment an impatient hoof pushed up a little window in the boat, and the long sad face of a mule looked out.

"He's just got up," remarked the woman. "Maybe he wants his coffee now. Do you suppose?"

The man looked around and nodded a pleasant good morning to the mule.

"He's had his breakfast," he said.

"How many mules does it take to drag a boat to Buffalo?" asked the woman.

"Four mules can drag three of these boats tied together. Mules are very strong animals. We take very good care of them, though. We make them work six hours, but we let them rest six hours, too."

"That is very kind of you," said the woman, "and I thank you very much for telling me how you put them off at Buffalo. I always wondered," as she took her leave, "what became of the mules when they got the electric cars in the big cities everywhere."

There seemed to be no end to the docks. She went on a very little way and came to another. Business was brisk here. A big boat had just landed. All about it were wagons filled with green bananas, piled up and running over. Up high, by a red-and-black smokestack, silhouetted against the blue sky, rather effective in the sunlight, a man stood calling:

"Wagon number fourteen, green bananas, thirty-five bunches. HowmuchamIoffered?"

He was about the most picturesque auctioneer the woman had ever seen, partly because he was so high up and partly because he was so unexpected.

Buyers stood below him in anxious bunches. Wagon after wagon passed in review, was sold to the highest bidder, and started off toward the city with its bright-green burden.

"He's getting a good price for his fruit this morning," remarked a bystander. "The boat is from the West Indies."

"When is it going to sail?" asked some one.

"Next week," was the reply.

The woman left this dock and came to another. Hard by an old blue wall, just before she came to it, four men rested, eating their luncheons out of tin buckets. They were sunburned men, but their faces were thickly covered with white powder. So were their shoes. She was about to ask them why they powdered their shoes as well as their faces, but they smiled so cheerfully at her that she lost her courage.

At this dock lay a large boat, also rocking with a lazy motion. Two men stood on the deck, talking earnestly, looking over down into the internal workings of the boat at something.

She stood looking at them. A sailor approached and asked her very politely if she would like to go aboard. It was now about dinner time. An East Indian cook emerged from a cabin with a basket. The basket shook as he stepped out the door and spilled the coffee. Nevertheless she thanked the sailor kindly and refused to go aboard.

"Where are you going when you go away from here?" she questioned.

"To Cayenne," he answered.

"Where is Cayenne?"

"In the West Indies."

"What cargo do you carry?"

"Tea, rice, lumber."

"When do you sail?"

"Next week."

"Will anybody be left on the river front at all next week do you think?" the woman begged to know wistfully, trying hard to think of some friends who might remain in town to console her for this wholesale departure, trying to remember that these were people she had known only an hour or so anyway, and it didn't much matter.

"I don't know, I am sure," the sailor replied.

The woman wandered on and on by other lazy boats waiting to set sail next week, by tugs pointing seaward, by yachts whose decks were being briskly scrubbed preparatory for their going next week, by more canalboats manned by mules and decorated gayly by the week's wash, by little boats taking passengers out to the big boats, by sluggish lumber boats guiltless of decoration or beauty, by sailors and sea Captains and sunburned second mates and crews, till she came to where the great gray skeleton of the Brooklyn Bridge put a stop to her mad career and turned her suddenly right about face homeward.

And she was not sorry for that, to tell the truth, for, what with all this hoisting of sails and resting up for journeys and getting ready to go "next week" to the four corners of the universe, in spite of her love for her beautiful Manhattan of the tall gray towers, encircled by the sea, she was just a little afraid of catching the fever of Wanderlust, of which a microbe already existed in her veins, and setting sail, too.

SCIENCE'S DEBT TO PROF. YOUNG

pany, Philadelphia, and Frederick A., United States Coast and Geodetic Survey. His father was Ira Young, Professor of Natural Philosophy and Astronomy from 1833 till his death, in 1858. He was a lineal descendant of Sir John Young, who, with five others, received in 1626 a grant of the "north shore" of Massachusetts, extending from Boston to the mouth of the Merrimac. The grandfather of Ira Young was present at the battle of Lexington.

Prof. Young's mother was Eliza Minot Adams, daughter of Prof. Ebenezer Adams, Professor of Mathematics, Natural Philosophy, and Astronomy from 1809 to 1833. Prof. Adams was a son of Ephraim Adams of New Ipswich, who was a member of the Committee of Safety, and for a time in the Revolutionary Army, the ancestry dating back to a Rev. Charles Adams, in Charlestown, Mass., about 1636, (not the Presidential family.)

* * * * * * *

Personally Prof. Young is most unassuming, and, although it was with some trepidation that I ventured to approach him in search of material for the above article, his cordial greeting when I stepped from the train at Princeton placed me entirely at ease. Together we wandered across the university campus, on the way to his house, while the professor pointed out the different buildings and told me their use and names.

He seemed to take special pleasure in drawing my attention to Nassau Hall, where, as he informed me, the British took refuge at one time / [illegible] the battle of Princeton, in 1777. Being a Britisher myself, I naturally resented the idea of our soldiers "running away and hiding themselves," as Prof. Young expressed it, but when I turned and looked at him in surprise, the merry twinkle in his eyes showed me that he was just having a little joke at my expense. By the way, those who know him well among the students often refer to him as "Twinkles," on account of this peculiarity I had just noticed. I ventured to ask him if he was aware of this fact and he replied:

"Yes, indeed, and they call my grandson 'Twink.'"

When we arrived at the professor's house two cats were stretched out at full length on the porch step, and regarded us with a calm air of indifference as we approached. The professor seemed very much amused at them, and informed me that their names were Bob and Bobbina. They apparently expected the professor to play with them, and he did, showing that even astronomers will sometimes stoop from observation of things celestial to terrestrial objects such as cats.

We then went into the professor's library, where I felt very much at home, as I recognized books and pictures of the same kind which had become familiar to me for so many years in my father's study. The professor then showed me the beautiful loving cup which was presented to him May 18, and of which he is very proud. He pointed to the Greek inscription (quoted at the beginning of this [illegible] the menu of the Observatory of Instruction, which is devoted entirely to the use of students, and is fully equipped for its purpose. Here are the telescopes, spectroscopes, &c., already referred to as being in use at Wadesborough, N. C., at the time of the total eclipse of the sun May 28, 1900. There were also two standard clocks and five subsidiary clocks, including one specially invented by Prof. Young. I then had a glimpse of the nine-and-a-half-inch telescope which was the telescope until the installation of the great equatorial of nearly twenty-three inches aperture and thirty feet focal length. It is housed in the Halsted Observatory, a stone building with a dome thirty-nine feet in diameter, the power for moving it and its sliding shutter being furnished by an electric motor and a storage battery.

But time was fleeting, and once more we wandered across the campus, but this time in the direction of the Princeton station. There was something pathetic in the thought as I said "good-bye" to the professor, that he, too, would soon be saying "good-bye" to Old Nassau, with all the associations which must (for him) cling around its ivy-clad walls.

THE OCEAN YACHT RACE—A POET'S SYMPOSIUM

I.

BY AL-G-N CH-S SW-NB-NE.

Sweep of the surges, songs of the sailors,
born of the boats that are battling the billows;
Froth at the far floating feathery flotsam, strewn in the shimmer and sheen of the sea;
Clouds that careen in the coil of the Cosmos, flaunting the fast flying foam in men's faces—
Faces that feel the frail foam in its falling; men mention the foam as the keen foemen shun
Swift through the tilt of it, lilt of it; built of it; built of the tremulous toss of its treachery;
Pale with the prescient pulsing of Promise, palpitant pride in their passages past;
Flushed with a fury to fling off their followers; straining in struggle still stay the stray stragglers:
All, save the trophy, forgot and forsaken—prising no gain save of gaining the prize.

Wearily warding, the world waits their wending, watching the Westward where whirls the wan wave-crest;
See princes, nobles, hurrying seaward; see Kings—proud sea Kings—all seeking the sea!
Wondering warily, wide-wahd'ring Wilhelm watches and waits for the wings that come winning;
Rising, rewarding the resolute racer, the cup-bearing conqueror crowns with his crest.

From sky to sky, from pole to pole—
Our Ships, of England's majesty
The token—Lord, preserve them whole.

Across the trackless Ocean's waste
Let England's Ships still lead the way:
Let lesser breeds in lawless haste
Still vainly strive—unanswered pray.

Flag that floats 'neath all earthly skies,
Still lead the broad Sea's goodly van;
Then, Lord, bestow the imperial Prize
Upon Thy Brassey Englishman.

The prize once offered by the imperial hand,
That shall denote the mastery of the sea—
Lordship of Ocean and the swelling flood—
Potent commandment of th' encircling waste.

And first gaunt England guides her lordly ships;
By right of old pre-eminence she avers
Hers the proud trophy. Germany rides fair,
And flings her pennant to th' imperial breeze;
One ship, but men recall old Esop's tale—
One, but a lion—watch those Teuton sails.

With powerful stroke and horrid puffing noise:
But now their screws are safely left at home,
And by no force impelled save kindly winds
The rival ships are battling with the wave.

'Twere well for me to cease this powerful verse:
The yachts' course being three thousand miles or so;
And, were I to continue in this vein,
I might reel off some fifty thousand lines
Ere I had led them half the way across.

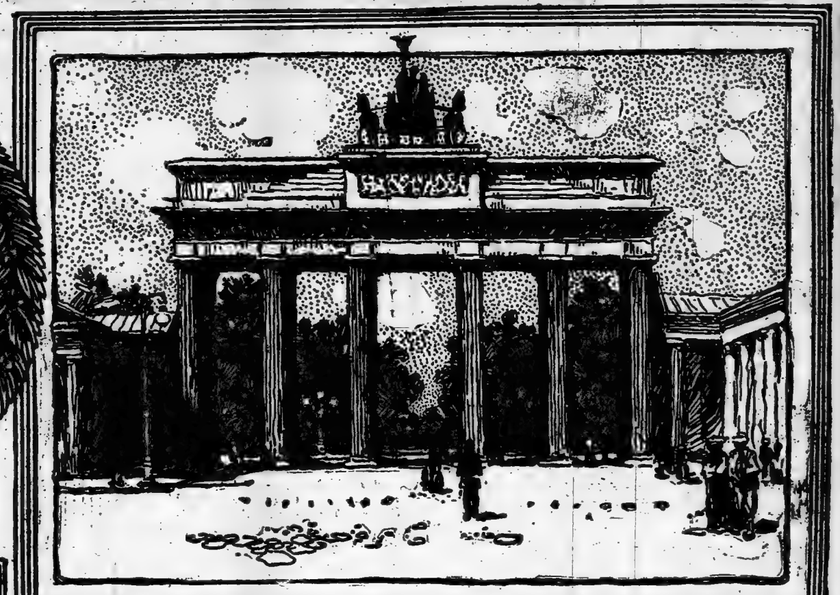
When the Royal Wedding Bells Ring in Germany

THE CROWNPRINCE & THE DUCHESS

THE CROWNPRINCE AS A STUDENT



THE BRANDENBURG GATES

How the Union of the Future Kaiser and the Duchess Cecilie of Mecklenburg-Schwerin Will Be Celebrated---A Splendid Trousseau and Bridal Gifts Galore---Personal Characteristics of Crown Prince.

A FEW days ago, at the memorable Schiller celebration of the Berlin University, I had occasion to see the Crown Prince, who sat in the royal box of the Royal Opera House, representing his father, the Kaiser. In a few weeks, I said to myself, this modest, boyish-looking young man will be the centre of interest when he marries the Duchess Cecilie of Mecklenburg-Schwerin. A proud day it will be, indeed, for him when on Saturday, June 3, at the head of his magnificent-looking regiment, he will march up Unter den Linden, and, passing through the famous Brandenburg gates and the Thiergarten, receive his future wife at Castle Bellevue. The Princess on her ride from the station to the castle will be escorted by the guild of Berlin butchers.

It is an old privilege which the guild for time immemorial has had before all other trade organizations, of escorting royalty. The butchers on this festive occasion will appear in frockcoat and top hat. They will bear before them an old guild flag which has been in their possession for over 200 years, and which was used at the crowning of Frederick I., the first King of Prussia. From Castle Bellevue the royal procession will pass through the Thiergarten and stop at the Brandenburg gates, where the Princess Cecilie will be formally received by the Mayor of the city and by representatives of the guilds.

The Brandenburg gates and surrounding square, the Pariser Platz, will be beautifully decorated for this purpose. The poetic idea which will be carried out in the decorations is: Berlin strews flowers before the Duchess. She will be received at the Pariser Platz, in the middle of which two reviewing stands have been erected. Behind the stands are to be seen a row of pillars of various sizes, bearing on the top the images of bears, who are represented in the act of strewing flowers. Long festoons composed of flowers will extend down the pillars. The Princess will be greeted by a line of happy children, dressed in immaculate white, wearing wreaths of red roses on their heads, and in their hands will bear twigs of roses which they will wave toward the Duchess. She also will be greeted by a line of maids of honor, who, like the children, will bear wreaths of roses on their heads. The columns of the Brandenburg gates, from capital to capital, will be connected by wreaths of flowers, intertwined with ribbons. The cost of all these decorations will amount to 150,000 marks, which will be paid by the City of Berlin.

The entry of the Duchess into Berlin will be followed by a gala dinner at the Schloss and a special performance at the Royal Opera House in the evening. On Sunday a family dinner will follow. On Monday there will be an advance celebration which at German weddings always precedes the regular marriage ceremony, the so-called "Polterabend." Finally, on Tuesday morning, the civil marriage will be performed by the master of the royal house, Count von Wedel, while at noon the religious ceremony will be performed by Dr. Dryander, the royal court preacher. Finally, on Wednesday, an old historical wedding custom will be executed, the so-called Game-cour.

King and Queen and the newly married couple sit at a regular gaming table, and similar tables are provided for the other Princes and Princesses. Behind them stand their courtiers. Then in lines of three and four the invited guests appear before the royalties, make a deep bow, and retire on the other side of the hall. Formerly during the "cour" regular games were indulged in, but now only the tables remain. This "cour" will be followed by the so-called torch dance, (fackeltanz.) The Court and the guests return to the "white hall," and the Kaiser gives the order to the Court Marshal to give the sign for the beginning of the dance. The Marshal precedes the Ministers, who bear torches in their hands and walk around the bride, the Kaiser, and the royal Princes. Similar attention is then shown to the bridegroom, the Empress, and the Princesses. At the close all those present enter again in line, while the torch-bearers escort the married pair to the bridal chamber. After the young people have retired, the chief lady in waiting bestows small silk garters on the guests, bearing the name of the bride and the date of the wedding. A complete collection of such garters given to former Prussian Princesses can be seen in the archives of the royal household.

For several weeks thousands have wended their way to see one of the bridal gifts of the Kaiser and the Kaiserin, exhibited at the Museum of Applied Arts. The design for this garment was made by Prof. Doepler, who was born in America. The silver embroidery was executed in the studio of Frau von Wedel. The train is made in the style of Louis XVI., and consists of red plush on which flowers of all kinds, roses, forget-me-nots, &c., are embroidered in silver. I am told that twenty women worked on the train for six months before it was finished.

Contrary to heretofore published reports, most of the trousseau of the Duchess Cecilie has been made in Germany. All the underwear has been produced in Schwerin. A few silk embroideries and tennis skirts have been made in Cannes. The elegant evening toilettes and calling gowns were ordered in Paris. The bridal dress, consisting of train and corsage, was made in Berlin. The silver embroidery, a gift of the grandfather of the Duchess, comes from Moscow, where the finest silver and gold brocades are woven.

The Prussian cities have united in a wedding gift, and the cost will be divided according to the population of each municipality. At the marriage of the Kaiser ninety-six cities, with a population of 4,709,478, contributed to the wedding present. Prussian cities having a population under 25,000 have decided to give a separate gift, of fine chinaware, to cost 19,360 marks. The share of Berlin in the present of the larger Prussian cities will amount to 90,000 marks. The presentation will take the form of a table service in gold and silver, which was likewise Prussia's wedding gift to Kaiser William. As on that occasion, only a model of the service will be exhibited on the wedding day, and several years will be required to complete the service itself. The designs are in the hands of four artists, each piece being submitted to the approval of a committee of six judges.

An original wedding present will be given by the famous City of Bunzlau, in Silesia. The Chief Magistrate of the city has given an order to four of the leading earthenware manufacturers of the place to make a lot of earthenware for the kitchen of the new couple.

An interesting wedding present will be given by the Provincial Council of Hanover. It consists of a replica of the famous silverware found in 1868 in the neighborhood of Hildesheim. Investigations made have shown that this silverware was captured by the old German Cheruskers from the Romans in the famous battle in the Teutoburger Forest. The Province of Silesia has decided to present its gift in the form of furnishing in an artistic fashion two rooms in the Crown Prince's Château Oels.

Two amateur composers, one a simple policeman, the other of royal blood, have composed pieces for the wedding. The policeman, named Graf, living in Potsdam, has composed a wedding march, to be played by a band when the Duchess Cecilie enters Berlin. A similar work of love has been rendered by the Kaiser's cousin, the Prince Regent of Brunswick, who is the author of a torch dance, to be played at the festivity in the Schloss already described.

Something should also be said of the guests who will attend the wedding. From Japan come Prince Arisugawa and wife, while Turkey will be represented by the Minister of Mosques and Churches, Turcha Pasha, and Gen. Abdûllah Pasha.

Several of the royal castles are now being put in order for the Crown Prince and his wife. Their regular abode will be the Stadtschloss, in Potsdam. In the Summer they will live in the marble palace of the same city. This castle is on a charming lake, the Heiligen See. It was built by Frederick William II. in 1787, but first assumed its present shape in 1853, under Frederick William IV. The castle will be provided with all comforts. Several rooms in the building will be enlarged by the taking out of walls. The kitchen, for example, connected with the castle by a subterranean passage, has been entirely renovated. The marble castle will be rebuilt in such manner that it can serve the Kaiser as a Summer residence, for the monarch and his wife have a great liking for the marble palace at which they lived in the first period of their marriage. In 1906 the Castle of Babelsberg, also in Potsdam, will be ready for the Crown Prince and his wife.

Babelsberg was the favorite Summer residence of the old Emperor. After his death the castle came into the possession of his daughter, the Grand Duchess of Baden, but so great was the cost of its maintenance that she turned over her rights in the property to the present Kaiser. He has, however, never lived in it, as he desired to maintain it as a memorial to his grandfather. Now at the express wish of the Crown Prince he has given orders to enlarge the castle by adding a dining room for 150 people, and a stable in which fifty horses can be quartered. The cost of rebuilding the castle will amount to 3,000,000 marks. The rooms where the old Kaiser lived will remain intact.

Directly after the marriage the Crown Prince and his wife will go to Castle Oels, in Silesia. It is not generally known that the Crown Prince is the possessor of an estate of his own, in Silesia, where this domain is located toward the City of Breslau. The estate takes in the little City of Oels. The surrounding country is a typical hunting ground, the forest consisting of magnificent alder trees. The City of Oels retains its mediaeval appearance, being still surrounded by walls which have not been destroyed by the modern spirit.

The Crown Prince's palace at Oels is very old. Crown Prince Frederick, who later became Emperor Frederick III., was the first to assume possession of the estate, and spent at least a few months a year there, as his favorite dragoon regiment was quartered in the neighborhood. His son, the present Kaiser, however, did not go to Oels, as his Crown Princedom was too short. The Crown Prince of today has been frequently at Oels in recent years, where he enjoys the hunting. He has erected at Klein Ellguth a charming hunting chalet, where the couple will reside until the royal castle is put in repair. The castle contains some valuable treasures and artistic decorations. Closely connected with the castle in Oels is the old castle church built in 979 A. D. It is filled with numerous old escutcheons, historical inscriptions, and ancient monuments of former rulers of Oels. Of a more recent date is the City Hall in the place, erected in 1410. Three lines of railroad pass the City of Oels. Russian exports such as grain, fowl, &c., must pass Oels before reaching Breslau. Oels now has a population of 12,000 people. It contains three churches and an excellent gymnasium.

Ten days after the wedding the royal pair will be formally received by the City of Potsdam. Just as in Berlin they will be awaited by the officials of the place, by the garrison, the guilds and veteran societies. The City Council has allowed 15,000 marks for decorative purposes. In the evening the city will be brilliantly illuminated.

Frau von Thiele-Winkler will be chief lady in waiting of the Crown Princess, while Count von Bismarck-Bohlen will serve as chamberlain to her husband. Count von Bismarck-Bohlen is the son-in-law of Count von Wedel, the House Minister of the royal family. Frau von Thiele-Winkler is the stepmother of Count Franz von Thiele-Winkler, a friend of the Kaiser. He has been in America, and on his return wrote a book on his experiences in our country. All these personages are closely related.

The Crown Prince was enrolled at the University of Bonn in 1901. This was an important event, because he was the first Crown Prince of the new German Empire to become a student at the institution. The Kaiser himself brought his son to the city. Bonn was festively decorated, and the matriculation took place with much pomp. The Crown Prince attracted much attention by his youthful appearance. The next day the students of the university had occasion to meet him at a commers. The affair in honor of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the aristocratic students' organization, the Borussia, took place in the Beethoven Hall. The Kaiser presided, and when the sword fell three times his Majesty, after commanding "silentium," said: "I pronounce the Crown Prince a fox major," ("freshman major.") The Crown Prince in a few words thanked the corps for the honor, and then commanded a toast (salamander) in honor of his mother.

When the Crown Prince first entered the corps the sons of sundry wealthy noblemen also became members, in order to be much in his company. But they were doomed to disappointments. The heir to Germany's throne took no pleasure in students' enjoyments, and particularly detested excessive drinking. He was not allowed to engage in the mensur, although he attended several dueling affairs. The day is still remembered in Bonn when the Crown Prince entered the corpshouse to witness his first duel. He came in company with his future brother-in-law, the present Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin.

The Crown Prince was not at all popish while at Bonn. He frequently sat with the freshmen when there was no room at other tables. It is related that while automobiling the machine which he drove ran into a gutter and was injured. He helped to push the machine and also aided to carry water from a neighboring pump. Besides automobiling the Crown Prince while at Bonn greatly enjoyed tennis playing. As he once declared, "I need fresh air, if I would be any good." He took no particular pleasure to be in officers' company, but greatly enjoyed small evening parties, particularly when dancing was indulged in.

The Crown Prince takes a great interest in music. He is an accomplished violinist, and plays with a round, clear tone. At an early age the young Prince took music lessons. The Kaiser desired that the famous violinist Joachim should give the Crown Prince lessons, but the master declined.

Only on two occasions has the Crown Prince shown any inclination to take part in political affairs. The first time was when addressing a delegation of workmen at Oels after the sad Krupp affair, he spoke of the Socialists as the "Elenden" (miserable ones.) Lately some comment was aroused by his address delivered at a banquet of the Society of German students, an organization with strong anti-Semitic tendencies.

That the Crown Prince has no talent whatever for public speaking I had occasion to observe at the Duesseldorf Exposition. A more frightened individual I have never seen in my life, although he read his little speech. In justice to him it must be said that it is not easy for a mere boy to address a crowd of over 1,000 people. But, above all, it is said of the Crown Prince that he is more of a soldier than a politician. It is, furthermore, said of him that he is a man of a very serious disposition, and has a good knowledge of human nature. He is a good Christian, but is extremely tolerant, taking no interest, however, in liberal theological discussions.

As has already been said, the Crown Prince loves to play tennis, but also enjoys other athletic sports. He is frequently present at wrestling matches and horse races, and, like his father, is a fine yachtsman. It will still be remembered how he rode with his regiment up the steep stairway at Castle Sans Souci, in Potsdam, and how, on another occasion, in a wild steeplechase, he won the first prize. The Crown Prince, like his father, is a passionate hunter, and it was he, under the guidance of the Kaiser, who shot his first deer.

Cooper Union's Crowning Glory, Its Museum of Decorative Art

COOPER UNION, New York's unique philanthropic institution, will celebrate the coming week the close of its forty-sixth year. Thursday evening the Woman's Art School will have its annual reception and exhibition, while Friday evening the Male Art Department will be at home to its friends. The annual commencement exercises will take place Saturday evening in the large hall. Thursday and Friday evenings the entire building will be open for public inspection. This has been one of the most prosperous years in Cooper's long history of usefulness. No other institution in the country, perhaps, has fitted gratuitously so many young men and women to earn a livelihood in the science, arts, and crafts.

Have you ever been to the fourth floor of Cooper Union? No? Well, the loss is yours—a loss it behooves you speedily to remedy, if you would know what one museum of decorative arts is doing toward filling a gap in our educational system which Sir Caspar Purdon Clarke deplores—namely, "art museums given to instruction of the application of art principles to the country's rapidly increasing industries."

"Has Cooper Union a museum of decorative arts?" the Curator of the Metropolitan Museum is reported to have asked in a recent interview.

With such intelligent ignorance in our midst may not Sir Caspar be pardoned for overlooking in his hasty summary of America's industrial art deficiencies Cooper Union's crowning glory?

It is nine years ago that the foundation of the Museum of Decorative Arts was laid in Cooper Union—a small collection of casts, engravings, prints, furniture, &c. Founded on the principle and with the assistance of the organizers and officials of the Musée des Arts Decoratifs, Paris, its arrangement has developed similarly to that of the Museum of Lille, which educators and experts consider of greater value to students and artisans than any industrial museum in France, the world's acknowledged leader in artistic and industrial trades. The increased endowment of the past few years, assuring Cooper Union a yearly income of some $90,000, gives the museum a new lease of life. From the small space once reserved to the collection it now occupies the entire fourth floor of the institution.

The objects displayed are chronologically arranged, and so simply, plainly labeled that he who runs may read. There is no occasion for catalogue, and the least intelligent workman can grasp the meaning of every article. In a chronological series of casts are representative models of French decoration from the early Gothic to the Empire period, covering architecture pure, exterior and interior decoration, furniture, together with original objects showing color and arrangement when in use.

There is no red tape, no restriction beyond what individual common sense and decency dictate. Application at the office admits student or workman from 8:30 A. M. to 5 P. M., and 6:30 to 9:30 P. M.—any time except Saturday evenings, Sundays, and Mondays. Copies of color or photographed. The museum is a rich mine for book illustration. One author found there twenty-five plates to illustrate a popular book, while another has used fifteen full-page illustrations, the Museum Scrap Books giving still another bookmaker thirty plates. A public library secured there exact copies of sixteenth century casts, while the Director of the Art School of Zion City spent many days in the museum, taking numerous pictures of casts to use in his illustrated lectures.

Workers in metals find not only a series of casts from the best authentic objects, dating from early Gothic to modern times, but nearly 600 genuine metal furniture mounts showing designs of workmanship, finish, &c., of the French Directoire and First Empire.

The collection of furniture begun two years ago by Mrs. Francis H. Bosworth consists now of more than sixty pieces, and its value to artisans and students is considerable.

The crowning glory of the museum, that which gives it unique distinction and will doubtless eventually put it in formidable line with the leading technical museums of the Old World, is the Pierpont Morgan collection of textiles.

Unsurpassed by any similar collection in Europe, it was purchased about two years ago at a cost of $30,000, but its value to students and artisans is beyond price.

Cooper Union also possesses the Thomas E. Kirby collection of old Japan brocades to the number of 672 pieces. Many of the finest specimens [illegible] pattern of the [illegible] lyric drama. Ten brocades are attributed to the Chinese.

A word is also due the gold, silver, jewelry crafts, ceramic arts, bookbinding, laces, samplers—all interestingly suggestive, while the art of engraving is shown in a very complete collection of prints in good condition. The engravings are the gift of the late George Campbell Cooper, nephew of the founder, Peter Cooper. Visitors cannot fail to be impressed with the generous loyalty of Peter Cooper's descendants to the institution that immortalizes his name. Everywhere are contributions bearing the names of Coopers, Hewitts, and their collateral kin, while no less numerous are names associated in the public mind with much that makes for art and general culture. Where it has not been possible to secure originals for each decorative trade photographs and reproductions have been substituted, all of which are accessible to the workman.

Not the least interesting innovation is becoming an established feature—periodic loan exhibits. Mrs. Douglas's fine collection of fans is a source of inspiration to decorative designers, particularly now, when there is a fan design contest open to women art students. Miss Elsie de Wolfe's valuable collection of shoes and slippers of the sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth centuries, as well as footwear of the Orient, is sought by theatrical shoemakers and illustrators. A well-known society woman about to go abroad lends a collection of snuff boxes, which will be exhibited from May until November.

With either site secured, the Museum thousand students from the architectural and designing classes, as well as large numbers of manufacturers and professional trade designers, have worked in the museum and library.

"It is our great desire," said Miss Hewitt, who is indefatigable in her labors for the institution, "to make the museum the active centre of all art industrial workers until such time as similar small museums may be established in accessible sections of Greater New York. Such a series of working industrial museums is bound to come."

Managers of local art schools with industrial classes are invited to bring students to the Museum. Many have done so, including the Newark Technical School, the New York School of Applied Design, and the Young Men's Christian Association.

"It is our dream—and it will come true some day—to have the Museum, like South Kensington, exchange periodically with other museums in the city and elsewhere. South Kensington is the centre of a system of traveling art industrial exhibits like the traveling libraries that obtain in this country."

Cooper Union has reached a turning point in its remarkable career as a free educational institution. The Museum of Decorative Arts is rapidly outgrowing its quarters. Happily, the Trustees have set on foot a movement toward securing the Sixty-ninth Regiment Armory or Astor Library for Cooper Union's general library and reading room. Both structures, in close proximity to Cooper Union, will be vacated shortly.

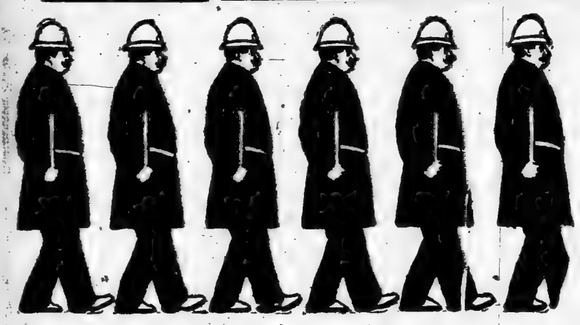
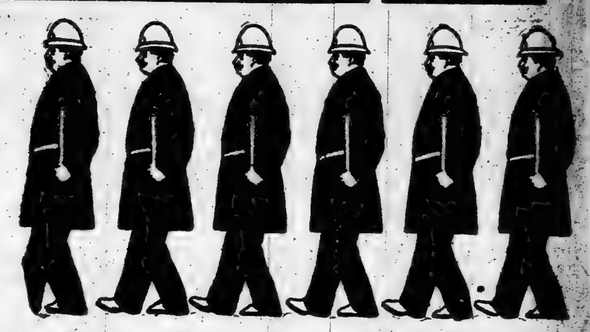
Why There Are No Murder Mysteries in Jersey City



A Talk with Chief Murphy, Who Has a Record of Twenty-five Years of Which to be Proud---His Forceful and Original Method of Dealing with Suspected Criminals.



BENJAMIN MURPHY, CHIEF OF JERSEY CITY POLICE.

"TRUTH is stranger than fiction" is a paradox that even the most daring have hesitated to apply to the achievements of the wonderful detectives of past and present literary vintage. In this branch of fiction, at least, imagination has overshadowed the actual, and the strange and unusual kinks, the breaks and surprises, and the startling abnormalities that frequently occur to interrupt the natural sequences of events have no place in the metropolitan annals of criminal detection. Lecoq, Vidocq, Chevalier Dupin, and, pre-eminently, Sherlock Holmes, have arisen in their appointed times to set impossible standards for the sleuths of real life, and have instilled into the public mind such conceptions of what a sublimated detective ought to be as to cause patronizing smiles even at the memory of the great Byrnes.

And yet, how about Benjamin Murphy, Chief of the Jersey City police? It is true that he is no Sherlock Holmes either in practice or theory, but he approximates that fictitious master in a vastly more important way—he gets results. And the husky young men of Mulberry Street, who are adding year by year to that long list of unsolved mysteries in Gotham, might do well to study him.

Jersey City has no unsolved murder mysteries, and in fact few unsolved high crimes of any kind. This is Chief Benjamin Murphy's boast, and he adds proudly that of all the murder cases that he has solved fully 99 per cent. of the persons arrested in connection with them have been convicted. Now that is a wonderful statement when you come to think of it, and yet it is verified absolutely by the police records.

On the 29th of next August Chief Murphy will celebrate his twenty-fifth anniversary as Chief of the Jersey City department. In that period he has had to deal with 232 murder cases, some of them as mysterious as any barrel, or cab, or other kind of mystery that has confounded Mulberry Street. And of that number there is no record of the perpetrator of any one of the crimes escaping arrest and conviction except in two cases, and in one of these the fugitive was arrested in South America, but never extradited.

In the other case a group of young roughs standing on a corner in the outskirts of the city became involved in an altercation with a tramp, who finally drew a revolver and let fly. One of the roughs fell dead, and the tramp escaped. This escape bothered the Chief at the time, but his failure to capture the man is not regarded by him as a blot on his 'scutcheon, and neither it is. The main point is that he has never failed to solve a murder mystery, and that the murderers have always been apprehended, and, as has been said, convicted to the extent of 99 per cent. That this is an enviable record no one can deny, and it marks Jersey City as a remarkably precarious place in which to indulge murderous passion.

How does he do it? Benjamin Murphy smiled his peculiar little smile when this question was put to him and shrugged his shoulders very much after the manner of the vaudeville magician when he looks at his audience and whispers, "Isn't it marvelous!"

"Well, I am no Sherlock Holmes," he said, finally. "No, but then—well, let's see—including all editions I reckon that Sherlock solved some 150 high crimes; we may not have used his highly spectacular methods over here—in fact, I am willing to admit that we did not—and yet Mr. Conan Doyle will have to write many more Holmes stories before his great detective can approach us, numerically, at least." Then the smile faded away.

"Oh, we work in a perfectly logical way over here," he said. "There is nothing terrible involved in the way we go after a murder mystery, or in the way we solve it, either, for that matter. We have a perfected system, that is all, and results show that it is a very fine system. No, I am not averse to telling you all I can about it; not at all. Sit down," and the Chief opened a drawer and drew out several charts of the city and some blank forms.

"At the outset," he said, "I might say that our cardinal precept is 'get moving quick.' The minute a high crime has been committed—and by high crime, of course, you know that I refer to murder, arson, grand larceny and the like—every man in the department is on the jump right on the second. We endeavor, so far as getting started is concerned, to take pattern after the Fire Department. When a crime is committed the reserves of the precinct in which the murder or whatever it happens to be are shot out of the station house on the jump, as are also the Captain and the precinct detectives. Before they are well started I and my detectives are on the scene, and the work of investigation begins forthwith. And—this is a good point, I think—we never drop that case until it is solved. The papers may drop it after the novelty has worn off, but that does not affect us; we keep going, and sometimes the mystery may continue for a few weeks or for a year, but at the last we fathom it and oftimes land our man. I have arrested many men charged with burglary more than a year after the crime was committed.

"There was that murder in Suydam Avenue more than a year ago. A woman, keeper of a boarding house, was found strangled in her cellar. Inside of twenty-four hours we had learned the identity of the murderer, but within that time he had the chance to escape on one of the German steamships. We knew that he was a Hungarian, and as in this country all roads lead to New York, and in England to London, so in Hungary all roads lead to Budapest. So we wired the police authorities there, and about two months ago he was arrested.

"That lifted a great load off my mind, and I felt very happy, because I considered that a blot on my record. He is to be tried this week in Budapest. You know Hungary will never allow the extradition of her own citizens, but they do just as well; they try them over there. So last week the Prosecutor, Mr. Winfield, tried the case, examined all the witnesses just as though the prisoner were present at the bar, and the minutes of this examination are now on their way to Hungary. These will be used by the Hungarian prosecutors, and the man will be convicted and will pay the extreme penalty. There is no escape for him—our case is too strong. In the investigation of that case we had first of all two boarders to consider. One of them committed the crime; the other did not. We had then to look for motives, and, as I say, within twenty-four hours we had picked out the boarder who had done the deed."

"I have made a deep study of criminology," continued the Chief, "and this coupled with my personal experience has convinced me that no sane person ever takes human life without an adequate motive. If the murderer is not caught red-handed the discovery of a motive is our first task. I attribute a large part of our success in catching murderers to our careful preliminary work in considering motives. What we first wish to know, what we must know when we are investigating a murder case is to find what person could have had a motive to do a human being to death, and what that motive was. After that we are ready to place our hands on the murderer; at least, that has been my experience."

This naturally brought up the question of circumstantial evidence, and upon it the Chief had well-formed opinions.

"Do you approve of it?" he was asked.

"Certainly I approve of it. In many ways I consider it the best kind of evidence. Circumstances never lie; witnesses do, sometimes. Circumstantial evidence properly collected and worked up is the most damning evidence there is, in my opinion. I have secured many convictions in that way, and have never failed to convince juries that my deductions were correct."

"Well, Chief Murphy, that is all very good, but your statement that 99 per cent. of your arrests result in convictions argues even more than you have said with regard to your system for the detection of crime. Over in New York, you know, an arrest need not necessarily argue a conviction—in fact, far from it."

Chief Murphy raised his eyebrows and whipped up from his desk a blank form. All his movements and his facial expressions were soft and smooth—velvety, if the word be permitted. He is a small man, with bushy, reddish eyebrows shielding blue eyes, and above, the thinly thatched dome of the thinker.

"Here," said the Chief, "here is the secret of our success in convicting criminals. When a prisoner is arrested, I—I interview him—alone. There are no lawyers present. Over in Jersey, here, we argue that our business is the detection of crime, and we proceed along those lines with no interference from lawyers or any one else. Here is the way this form reads:

"'I am Benjamin Murphy, Chief of Police. I am going to ask you questions concerning the crime for which you are arrested. You may answer or not as you please; for what you say must be of your own free will—in other words a voluntary statement. What you say will be taken down in writing and used against you at your trial. You are arrested for shooting —— at —— o'clock on —— afternoon, &c.' This," resumed the chief, "is our business. When the statements are properly handled there is little chance of the trial going wrong. These statements have been tested in all courts and have stood the ordeal. Mind you, there is no brutality, no third degree, in the accepted meaning of the term; the prisoner is questioned, that is all, and we do not put our hands on him."

"Well, how do you make them talk then?"

Chief Murphy smiled his inscrutable little smile and remarked patiently that there were some secrets that he did not intend to give away even to help his reputation.

"No harm is ever done," he said, "but my theory is—and it is a good one—that an innocent person never can say anything that would hurt him, which is as true as sunlight. Many times these statements have helped our brethren across the river. In the case of the negro Preston, arrested for that West Thirty-ninth Street murder in Manhattan, we arrested him over here, got our statement system going, and handed a complete and deadly case to the New York authorities.

"Another precept of ours is that there is no earthly use in arresting and presenting for trial a prisoner against whom the evidence is faulty or incomplete. Our aim is to get the proper evidence against the prisoner, and then when he is placed on trial the prosecutor is provided with sufficient ammunition to hurl so many damaging and incontrovertible facts in the faces of the jury as to convince them beyond all doubt. We never put a case on trial until we are certain that we have the right man beyond all question of doubt.

"Of course we are smaller over here than they are in New York, and have less cases, but I will compare our system and our results with those of any city in the world."

"You would have liked to have had a chance at the 'Caesar' Young murder, would you not?"

The chief leaned forward. "Now, don't quote me," he said, and then he talked in a low voice, ending with a hungry smile—"ah, perhaps—well, you know, I should liked to have tried it. And Florence Burns! Oh, well, there is no use talking. But I can say this: Get hold of your prisoner quick. Then sit down in a private room with him or her, and then apply this statement system. That is all; after it you will know whether or not the prisoner is guilty. That is certain.

"Jersey justice! No, I do not think that is a meaningless term. No, it surely is not. It is full of meaning. You see, our life over here is less complex than in New York, perhaps that has something to do with it. We have time to get at things quicker here and to concentrate our energies—perhaps that is the secret. I don't know."

Old Time Forgers Who Live Here Without Any Visible Means of Support

IN behalf of the Protective Committee of the American Bankers' Association, James R. Branch, Secretary, gives emphatic denial to the statement brought out before a Magistrate in the Tombs Court last week that five of the cleverest forgers and check-raisers in this country are now pensioned on their promise not to do any work of the sort that banks most fear.

"This charge comes up every two or three years," said Mr. Branch. "It was made not long ago in connection with a forgery committed in San Francisco. The rules of our association expressly prohibit anything in the nature of compounding a felony; and that is precisely what a pension to these forgers out of jail would be. On the contrary, we make it our business to follow up these forgers, prosecuting them on one crime after another until we virtually have them in prison for life. We never let go. What is the use of pensioning them when we can put them behind prison bars?"

In spite of this denial it is quite well known to men engaged in both public and private police work that old-time expert forgers, many of them supposed to be either dead or in jail, are living quiet and fairly luxurious lives in this city, although they do not work for a living and have no visible means of support. They are much in evidence at the race tracks and the baseball grounds. One of the cleverest of them, not even excepting the famous C. O. Brockway, considered king of all forgers in his day, was seen to doff his hat to former Chief of Police Byrnes the other day in front of the Standard Oil Building. His name is Charles Becker. The Bankers' Association credits him with being safe in jail on the Pacific Coast for check-kiting in San Francisco. But Becker is here in New York, according to the statement of one of Inspector Byrnes's old detective staff, who has twice arrested him, and who knows him well. He is sixty-five years old now. His hand, which trembles like that of a man afflicted with palsy, has lost its cunning. But he is an expert chemist, and would be a dangerous man in the business if he cared to work at the old game. He frankly confessed to an ex-detective whose duty it once was to keep him on the uptown side of the Maiden Lane deadline that it was for his pecuniary interest not to work.

There are others. "Billy" Ogle, who worked and has served terms in prison under the alias of Frank Somers, is also wandering at will around the streets of New York with plenty of money in his pocket. He was a pupil of Brockway, who picked him up somewhere in Chicago. Former Inspector McLaughlin arrested him several times. He has done time in every important prison in the country. Now he is a man of leisure, with an independent income, coming from nobody knows where. "Little Joe" Elliott, or Frederick Elliott, to give his correct name, lives in Brooklyn in a nice house. Among his neighbors he is believed to be a manufacturer of ink. Policemen who have seen his picture in the Rogues' Gallery for years and who frequently meet him on the street, have never been able to find out his place of business or seen any of the ink he is supposed to manufacture. Edward Darling, Charles R. Titus, Edward Condit, and other check forgers who were famous in Byrnes's time are now living in New York. Two are in Philadelphia. They are frequently called upon to give information to the police and private detective agencies that leads to the arrest and punishment of younger forgers now in the game. Circumstances go to show that they give similar information to the Protective Committee of the Bankers' Association.

There is no questioning the fact that the Bankers' Association is greatly feared by check forgers, and that it has almost driven them from the field. Not long ago a job was put up to rob a bank up the State. The forgers were in the bank, and everything was favorable for their scheme when they saw the sign of the association over the cashier's window. They went out and worked the game on a bank across the street that was not a member of the association. Then they wrote to the cashier of the bank that displayed the sign telling him what a narrow escape he had. In another town they got away with the goods before they found out that the bank was a member of the association. Before the police were on the track the money was returned to the bank with a note to the cashier requesting him to put the association's sign over his window and not lead unsuspecting check-kiters into trouble. An officer of the Bankers' Association told these incidents to a reporter for THE NEW YORK TIMES to illustrate how greatly it was feared among forgers and bank burglars from one end of the country to the other.

The association will spend thousands of dollars, if necessary, to run down its man. Its resources are virtually unlimited. It has fine central offices in Pine Street, this city, and branch offices in every important city. Once it gets on the trail of a forger it never quits until the man is run down, and if he is sent up on one charge it finds out if there are other charges against him and prosecutes him on the second as soon as he has done time for the first, and so on. As the association works through the police of the various cities as well as through various private detective agencies, and is liberal in its payments, it stands high with all classes of men whose business it is to run down criminals. In the banks robbed, so far as known, between September of last year and February of this year, the total loss to the non-members of the association was $32,983, as against a total loss of $9,117 to bankers who are members of the association.

"While the American Bankers' Association cannot always tell you who did forge a check when a big transaction of that nature comes to light," said a former Detective Sergeant of the New York police force, "it can invariably tell you who did not do it. Its officers seem to know all the old-time forgers who are out of prison, as well as those who are inside, and are informed as to what they are doing. I will not go so far as to say that the association pensions those men for keeping idle, but it is pretty generally understood that the old-timers have ample assurance of support if they give no further trouble. The association works very much on the same principle that Byrnes used to do with thieves and crooks. He used to keep his eye upon them and keep posted on what each man was doing. By eliminating from the equation the crooks whom he knew could not have been implicated in a certain crime, it was easier for him to run down the person likely to be guilty.

"There are three methods of bank swindling—by draft raising or altering, by forging signatures of indorsement of a depositor or payee, and by gaining the confidence of an officer of the bank and raising money on bogus notes. In draft or check raising, which is the simplest and most common form, four men divide the profits. The forger and the man who presents the check get 20 per cent. each. The purchaser and another middleman get 20 per cent. each. If they get pinched it is the man who forged the check that takes the punishment. While in the business forgers are more loyal to one another than any other class of criminals. They never 'peach.' In looking for a forger it is not much use to look in haunts frequented by all classes of criminals. The forger flocks by himself. He does not believe in associating with convicts of great reputation unless they are in his own line of business. An old-time forger told me the other day that the men now at work feared the telephone more than all the police and the detective associations put together. That was the way the man who tried to negotiate the Bloomingdale checks was caught. When a crook who tries to pass a bogus check sees the man he hands it to move toward the telephone booth he gets away as quickly as he can.

"A man who is clever enough to forge a check is a man whom an employer wants to keep if he can," said Detective Charles Heidelberg. "While I was in the department under Inspector Byrnes I knew of several instances where employers who had clerks arrested for forgery refused to prosecute and took the men back into their employ. There was Chu-Fong, a clever Chinese forger, who was arrested in December, 1889. He was taken back by his employer. So was Henry Fisher, whom I arrested in February, 1892, for a very ingenious forgery. But he was six months in Ludlow Street Jail before his employer decided he wanted him again in his business. Gustave Koebler, who was arrested for forgery in October, 1885, and who admitted his guilt, was taken back by his employer in Harlem without punishment. I have even known employers to take forgers back after they had done time. Byrnes used to know of these cases and ask the men to come down to Headquarters to see him now and again."

Russian Army Now Confronts a Formidable Foe in the Plague

DURING the past year the plague has appeared at numerous places in Russia's vast territory, European and Asian, but the recent outbreak at Harbin, where 300 deaths a day are reported, is the most menacing of all, with the prospect that that country may find itself confronted with a foe in the East as formidable as the armies and fleets with which it is now contending. It has faced the same dread malady a good many times in the course of its history, and has not, on the whole, been so successful in contending with it as have other European countries.

When it appeared in 1878 in the Provinces of Astrakan and Vetlianka, brought across the Caspian from Persia by some Cossack soldiers, out of village populations which it attacked in some cases as high a proportion as 95 in 100 perished. Over all the territories named, with others contiguous, it was of terrible virulence, leaving in many places but a remnant of the population. The inhabitants lived in great filth and squalor, many of them in cabins with neither window nor chimney, men, women, and beasts together, affording conditions for the spread of the pestilence which may still prevail in some portions of Russia, but could hardly be found in any other European country. The Government immediately established a cordon sanitaire around the infected districts, and thus in a measure arrested the spread of the disease, though cases of it appeared now and then throughout the entire country, even Moscow and St. Petersburg being threatened. A convention of physicians was called in the latter city to consider the disease and the best means of arresting it, but except to recommend enforcement of local sanitary precautions they could do little.

The doctors sent to watch it nearly all sacrificed their lives in the service. Dr. Morovof of Vetlianka fell early at his post; Dr. Kvarsowski, Medical Director of the Russian Army, followed him; Dr. Koch and his six assistants officially sent to report to the Government upon the pestilence, all fell victims to it. No remedy was found for the disease. Some of its symptoms were those of typhus, but others identified it as the true Eastern plague. The bodies of those attacked became marked with little red patches, great reddish trains developed themselves upon the skin, making a sort of gangrene spot, ending in suppuration. The lymphatic glands of the groin and armpits swelled and became painful and a complete disorganization of the blood seemed to take place, the patient dying sometimes in a few hours and sometimes in two or three days following the attack. If the disease at Harbin should take on similar aspects and show a like severity, Russia would have even greater reason to remember its visitation as a national affliction and perhaps as a formidable element of danger to its military compaign in Manchuria, sorely enough beset without the alliance against it of the pestilence which walketh in darkness and which no armor or strategy can avail to ward off.

Records of this ineradicable malady are as old almost as any historic records. Thucydides described its visitation to Athens nearly five centuries before our era, and at the same time it laid waste Egypt and Ethiopia, the latter country being anciently regarded as its fountain-head, as China, where it is always epidemic, now is. The historian himself was one of the few who suffered from it and recovered. Pliny's records, some three centuries later, of its various visitations are copious and particular, giving a tale of its ravages not equaled by any modern experience, though the story of the Black Death of the fourteenth century comes fully up to it and is nowhere exceeded by any of the pestilences which in any period have visited mankind. That broke out in China, according to its native historians, in 1333. The same authority asserts that it destroyed 13,000,000 lives in China, and it was computed that more than twice that number fell before it in Eastern Asia and Northern Africa in its progress toward the European countries. These were entirely overspread by it from Spain and Italy to Scotland and Russia. Boccaccio's "Decameron" recalls its ravages in Florence in 1334. Italy lost half its population and other countries suffered in a corresponding degree. Probably the Great Plague in England in 1664, described by Defoe, presents to modern readers the most thrilling story of the pestilence which has anywhere been set down, though, bad as that was, its mortality was not to be compared with that of many earlier appearances of the malady. At its worst London did not bury so many of its dead daily as Harbin is doing now.

It is the follower of war and famine, these providing the conditions on which it best thrives, but in general its old terrors are abated. In the modern world it [illegible] virulent in [illegible] a giant shadow used to go before it is now much reduced in its proportions. Russia's battle with it at Harbin may be a severe one, and it is possible it may spread to her Manchurian armies in the field, but there is so far little reason to apprehend that it will there take on the terrifying aspects which it has sometimes worn.

Occurring in a Chinese province, it is natural that it should threaten contiguous provinces the most thickly populated in the world, but the countries of the west have probably little to fear from it. There is hardly one of them where scattered cases of this always dreaded and sometimes terrifying scourge have not in recent years appeared, but it has nowhere shown anything like the severity which it now exhibits in the Russo-Manchurian city. Three hundred deaths from sun to sun would have darkened Boccaccio's recital for afflicted Rome in the Black Death days, and that is what is now set down for calamity-stricken Harbin, built to be Russia's Orient granary and treasure house, the proud symbol of her hope, now with a new [illegible] upon it well-nigh [illegible]

THE FLATIRON BUILDING IN A SNOW STORM.

John Edward Jackson, a Southerner Who Is Deeply in Love with the Picturesqueness of "Little Old Manhattan Isle"---Plenty of Material Here for the Artist.

ON MORNINGSIDE HEIGHTS.

LOWER BROADWAY AND OLD TRINITY.

MR. JOHN EDWIN JACKSON of Nashville, Tenn., is an example of the assimilating power of New York on all kinds of human material—foreign, Canadian, New England, Southern, and Western. Down in Tennessee they have no reverence for New York because of its bigness and very little because of its wealth; nor do its sons and daughters reach the metropolis with any idea of visiting a centre of cultivation. If anything, they despise New York, and regard Nashville in several things superior. All the more interesting to find the somewhat supercilious offspring of the South who comes to New York merely to enjoy the art instruction, just as young medicos come here to profit by the unrivaled opportunities for clinics—to find him lingering on after his student years and actually developing a passion for the deep streets and cloud-touched towers of Gotham. Even artists, then, it must be acknowledged, can adapt themselves to the noise of the trolleys and elevateds, the rat-tat-tat of steam drills, the wailing of factory whistles, the honk-honk of motors, and the dislocation of all previous canons of proportion in civic architecture. Not only can he adjust his nerves to the racket, but find something to admire in what men flee—or affect to flee—as soon as the Spring comes and the country beckons them away.

Mr. Jackson has had experience of newspaper work on The Nashville American and Sun and Evening Mail of this city. He is a graduate of the schools of the Academy of Design, having studied during four years in the basement studios of the old English-Italian Late-Gothic building on Fourth Avenue—now no more. In 1899 he took the first Hallgarten prize for composition—but perhaps he didn't mean to, and the prize did not do him irretrievable harm. Where one sees his cartoons and compositions oftenest is in the pages of illustrated weeklies such as Life, and latterly his work has been appearing at the Water Color shows and the exhibitions of the Society of American Artists.

"Why, yes, of course I admire New York," remarked Mr. Jackson, looking up from his drawing-board as he put a swirly line to the skirts of a lady with a bit of charcoal, "and I can scarcely put myself back into the mood of not liking it which beset me when I first came here. Just run down to Philadelphia, New Haven, Providence, Baltimore, and note the difference."

"Do you mean in the crowds or the street landscape?"

"In both, but of course particularly the humanity for which the townscape is a background—that is what I specially enjoy."

"Isn't it unusual for one who is not a New Yorker to admire New York?"

"Not at all—on the contrary. Born New Yorkers seem to be impressed the least with the beauty of the city, its interesting places, the chances it offers for artistic material. Perhaps it's too near them, too commonplace. And so they don't see it, while an outsider, a man like myself, who hasn't been here ten years all told, can't get away from the wealth of impressions the city presents.

"You see, I came here from an old-fashioned Southern city," continued Mr. Jackson, "which I left before it had received the impetus of the New South—the boom that is now stirring all the Southern cities. It is needless to say that I came with a fresh eye for moving crowds and sky-scrapers. They impressed me more than anything else, and I haven't got over it yet. I have wanted to put them on canvas. the only ous drawings in black and white for the weeklies. About two years ago I made a series of night scenes of New York for a monthly magazine, which were printed as frontispieces in colors under the name of "Moods of a Great City." This was my first sustained attempt to realize my crude ideas about the beauty of New York and its availability for art suggestions. I have since been studying night and storm effects and all phases of picturesque New York, making sketches and pictures when I could find time."

"How do you

"What luck have you had with the Acceptance Committees whom so many artists complain of? Have they thrown you out as a mere illustrator?"

"They might have, but I have no reason to complain. My view is that of an illustrator rather than of a painter, because my training has been that way. Strictly from the painter's point of view, a quiet, hazy vista, or a city park with its sleepy loungers, or the rickety old buildings still to be found in Greenwich Village are all right as subjects. And they appeal to me. But the surging crowds and sky-scrapers appeal to me more. Nearly always I make the people in the street a prominent feature, and for that reason take the picture with a low horizon, viewing the scene as 'the man in the street' sees it. Now, as to pictures in the exhibitions. Why, as I said, there is nothing to complain of. The first I ever sent to an exhibition was a pastel called 'A Wet Night,' a nocturne including the 'Flatiron' Building. It went to the Water Color Club two years ago. I hardly expected to have it accepted, so you may fancy my astonishment when I found it actually on the line in the main gallery—quite beyond its real deserts, I'm afraid. You see, the 'Flatiron' was a novelty still, and as in life, so in exhibitions, variety is the spice."

"Anecdote pictures don't seem to be wanted. Still life is coming up."

"Perhaps that's it. No doubt many fine landscapes and marines, pretty figures of mothers and babes and damsels of greater or of equal merit were rejected. If so, then there is a text in it for artists, which may be expressed in the words of a comic person on the boards: 'Change your act!' To be more specific, after a student has learned to draw and paint, let him try to find something new on which to exercise his skill."

"So that is what you are doing now?"

"It seems to me New York is a mine of material for painters and etchers as well as writers, but for some reason it gets very little attention from artists, while the men of the quill never tire of describing its wonders and beauties. New writers are constantly appearing who see new things to note. And of course the colony of artists here is constantly on the increase by young men and women from all over the country. When they get out of school to look for something to paint it seems that New York isn't big enough for them."

"Or is it too big and, to change the proverb a little, they can't see the pictures for the houses?"

"Whatever it is, the fact remains that the majority of younger painters, as soon as they leave the classroom for out-door work, make a beeline for the ferry to New Jersey or Long Island to add to our stock of pictures of marshes and duneland. Now it's fine to get 'near to Nature's heart,' and undoubtedly sand dunes do make very good pictures. No one likes them more than I do; but personally I confess a wish for something more 'throbbing,' which, of course, is after all a matter of taste."

Béraud or a motor car like the latest townscapists?"

"Ah, there it is! One reason why beginners paint landscapes rather than townscapes lies in the obstacles in the way of work in the streets. In the country you can lug your sketching outfit about with few to bother you, set up easel and umbrella pretty much where you please, and take your time. And as a rule the country people are not so forward and annoying as the boys and street loafers. I cannot afford the Pariso-Persian luxury of cabs and motor cars. I have to limit myself to the crudest sketches only, relying on my memory for the picture which I carry out in my studio. As many of the effects I seek are swiftly passing impressions, I could gain little by planting an easel in or near a thoroughfare, and even if the crowd spared me the results would be no better."

"Do you find the camera of much use?"

"It saves a lot of trouble, and I believe in using anything that is useful—with discretion. The camera can never supply the artist, but I've no doubt that if cameras had been invented in his time Michael Angelo would have used one. For he was a genius with common sense, in which respect he was unlike some of the geniuses of later times. The camera I use is a small kodak which helps me in architectural details. For the figures, which are my main game, I never use it, since I find that 'thumb-nail' sketches and memory are the only trustworthy things. If anybody should dream that the camera can take the place of a knowledge of drawing he is doomed to a sad awakening. I make a composition independent of the photograph—which is only good for details. As for figures in action, such as I strive to draw as well as my ability permits, anybody must know that a snapshot of a figure in action does not show action at all."

"As a graduate of the Academy schools, what do you think of the plan to make them the centre of a department of art in Columbia?"

"If I can judge anything from present indications, now that the schools are temporarily the guests of the university, I should conclude that a college atmosphere is not the air in which art students find themselves happiest. The schools were better off, or I'm greatly mistaken, when they were in certainly they have not gained by the last move since the fire which drove them to accept the hospitality of Columbia. But I dare say the Academicians know best what the schools need, and I am too recent a graduate to 'butt in' with my opinion—though I see that I am not alone in it."

"You believe, then, in the training give by our art schools?"

"I am a firm believer in good drawing; but while good drawing is always thorough, not always is thorough drawing good. I mean that thorough drawing sometimes is so conscious that it becomes obtrusive and detracts from the real point of interest. What does the public—even the discriminating public—care about modeling and nice drawing that sets like a display of technique? Of course if the modeling is not good then the public will object, but modeling should be there as a means to an end, not as an end in itself."

"What do you think of the outlook as to new personalities in the world of artists?"

"Many of the younger generation are seeking new fields and are showing individuality besides. New ones appear every year who have the inclination and ability to do more than follow drawing and painting like a trade. They have been hard-working students, but look on their acquirements as tools to be used in making pictures. The work of Glackens is well drawn, but it is so easy and unconscious that you don't think of the technique, and the picture is more forcible on that account. The drawing of figures, and especially the study of expression and action, are very fascinating; so I intend to stick to figure subjects of city life rather than townscapes pure and simple. But I suppose I shall also keep up with the new skyscrapers and take them as they appear. The Times Building in rain and snow storm, at dusk and nighttime, has given me a subject more than once or twice."

HOME AND FOREIGN NOTES ON ART.

MR. F. W. RUCKSTUHL'S monument to the Confederate dead has been unveiled at Little Rock, Ark. It is dedicated "To the Soldiers of Arkansas, 1861-5," and on the pedestal to the left stands: "Arkansas Remembers the Faithfulness of her Sons and Commends their Example to Future Generations," and in the right: "Our Buried Dead who Trailed and Tore it." On the back of the pedestal is the seal of the Confederacy. The sculptor has placed on the top of a column a globe on which stands a winged, crowned, and draped female genius with wreath and trumpet in her left hand, and a wreath of laurel raised high in her right hand. Where the column rises from the plinth stands a bronze Confederate standard bearer holding the half-furled banner; part of the flag sways behind the figure. At his foot is half a wheel from a gun carriage. The chin is raised in a haughty expression, as the soldier looks out straight before him. The idea of this monument goes back to 1886, but it was not till 1897 that enough funds could be got together to approach the State Legislature. After $5,000 was secured the State granted another $5,000. The main monument is in buff French stone, the foundations being of Arkansas granite. About thirty feet high in all, the bronze figure is eight feet. It stands on the ground of the new Capitol at Little Rock.

A Royal Academician has hit upon a subject for a picture which in itself attracted the well-dressed crowd. "The Cheat," by the Hon. J. Collier, is a scene at bridge in which one of two ladies has been detected cheating at cards. To add to her success the bridge players at once set to work to discover which of the two across the table is dummy; there are only three players, and dummy's hand lies face upward at the vacant place. How, then, could the seated lady, who is the dealer, have managed to cheat? The mystery tickled the public of whist players greatly, and bets were laid that the Hon. J. Collier, who confessed he never played cards, had been caught napping. Finally he gave the clew by pointing out a card face downward on the table, and the devotees of whist and bumble puppy understood. The guilty one had nicked that card and the other woman detected it. Hence the indignation of the upstanding one and the misery of the "cheat."

The Philadelphia Inquirer suggests a union of the art collections of the Wilstock Gallery in Memorial Hall with those of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts and any private collections whose owners intend to present them to the city. The site proposed would be the unused reservoir in Fairmont Park, where the city might build a museum large enough to contain all these collections and later gifts and purchases. The reservoir stands across the Parkway, and would, if removed, furnish an admirable site for an art gallery, since it would be seen from many points. It has been known for several years that three large private collections—those of Mr. P. A. B. Widener, the late Mr. H[illegible] and Mr. John G. Johnson in Fairmount Park. "With the New York art schools consolidating," remarks The Inquirer, "it is evident that this city ought to do everything in its power to maintain the leadership in this branch of instruction which it has held for a century. There is money available for an art gallery; more can be raised, and the Academy site would bring a large sum."

London art circles are vibrating with wrath because the committee on acceptance of the Royal Academy rejected a large wax effigy of a nude man offered by Mr. Havard Thomas, a new sculptor, who has been living in Capri, far from madding Piccadilly. "Lycidas," as he calls his statue, has a rather untranslatable gesture, both hands up in the air as if expostulating, but it is a strongly individual piece of work, very different from the commonplace figures British sculptors usually produce. What made this piece, however, was its acceptance by the New Gallery, at whose exhibition the critics and cognoscenti have had a chance to see and extol its beauty. Four artists write an indignant letter to The London Times, speaking of the statue as "accepted by the unanimous voice of connoisseurs as one of the greatest triumphs of modern time." They call for a reform of the Academy into a truly national organization, representative and accepted as an authority. The educated public should insist on a change—"better that it should be abolished than continued as at present administered."

The Brooklyn Museum, on Eastern Parkway, near Prospect Park, will be reopened on June 2, when the large central section, recently finished, will appear with exhibits duly installed. It includes the new hall of archaeology and ethnology. The pictures will be rearranged.

SANITARIUM FOR HEBREW CHILDREN.

ONE of the valuable charitable institutions of the city which begins its work on the 8th of next month is the Sanitarium for Hebrew Children. The office of the sanitarium is in the Hebrew Charities Building on Second Avenue, and the building proper is at Rockaway Park, L. I. Over 20,000 children were cared for by the institution last year, and many more turned away because they were less needy, and the accommodations were not equal to the demands. An effort is being made now to raise money for a larger building, which will be built on more permanent lines than the present, which will be the main building of the institution, to which others can be added. The present building is a large frame structure, light and airy, with many windows and a double piazza surrounding it. It faces the ocean, as does a pavilion which adjoins it, and which is occupied by the day excursionists, who are sent down from time to time during the Summer.

The proposed new building, for which the design is already made, will be of stone, will contain many rooms, each of which is arranged to get air and sunlight, and will be used for an all-the-year-round sanitarium, which is much needed. Funds have not been raised for it yet, and it depends upon the friends of the work to make the building possible.

In addition to the regular sanitarium work, excursions by train and boat are given to the Hebrew mothers and children of the poorer parts of the city who do not require the sanitarium treatment, and for these, as in the sanitarium, a regular Jewish dietary is provided. Tickets, which are distributed to other needy families to enable them to make trips by themselves to different seaside resorts, show another branch of the work.

Among the children cared for the babies under two are given the preference, as they suffer most, and mortality is greatest among them during the Summer months. In the sanitarium there are trained nurses and two doctors in attendance. Good care with the sea air does so much for the little ones that in the entire season last year there were only six deaths, and these of children practically beyond help when they were received. In addition to the hospital ward in the sanitarium there are dormitories for the children who do not need hospital treatment, and they have their meals together in a large airy dining room. Those who are able to play spend each day out on the sand, and there are guards to care for the little ones who are able to go into the water.

There were 2,000 more children accommodated last year than in the season previous, and this year the sanitarium, which usually opens in July, will begin work in June, a month earlier, to enable it to cover more ground than ever before. There is no membership or fees of any kind, and the work is supported entirely by voluntary [illegible]

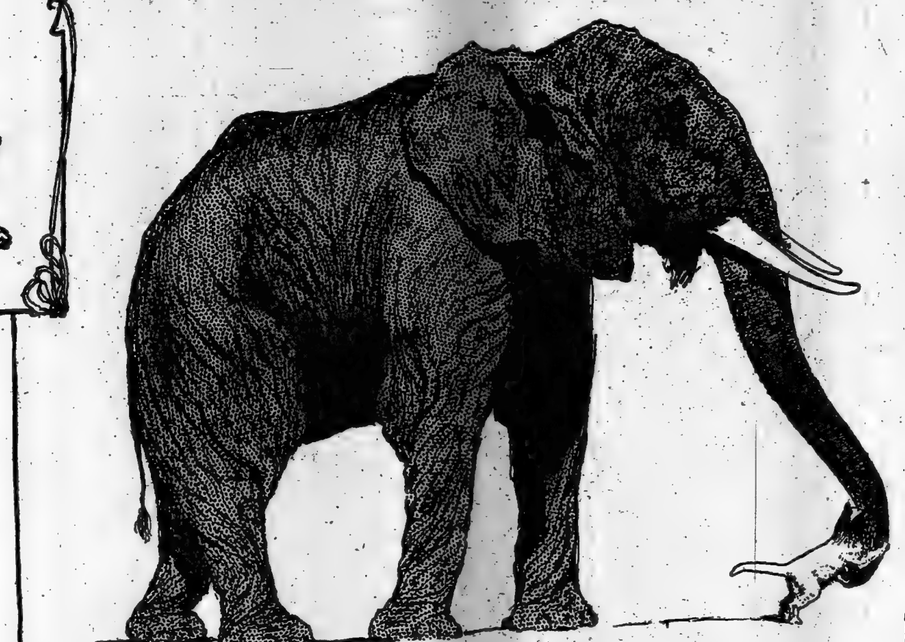
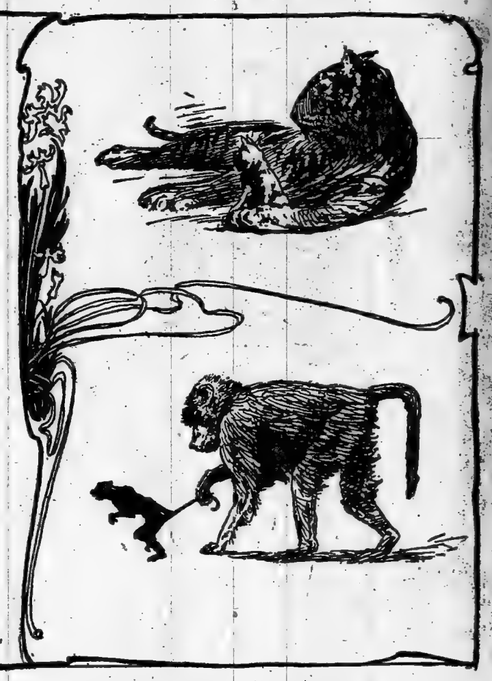
Captivity Makes Queer Friendships Among Animals





True Story of Spud the Yellow Dog and King James the Royal Bengal Tiger---Most Human Affection Existing Between Tommy the Little Grey Monkey and Buldo the Big Baboon.

IN a large barred packing box in the 'tween deck section of the Hamburg-American line freighter Christiania, now pounding her way to Hamburg through the North Atlantic turmoil, are confined two friends—King James, a royal Bengal tiger, and Spud, little Spud, the homeliest, "orneriest" bunch of yellow mongrel hair and snapping black eyes that ever traveled on a ferryboat.

That was what Spud did. He came from New York to Hoboken on a Lackawanna ferryboat, and somehow fate, instinct, or perhaps just dumb luck led him to Hexamer's livery stable where King James, the young Bengal was lunging nervously about within the narrow confines of his packing box.

Spud was dirty. One of his hind legs was askew, and his tail resembled a piece of moth-eaten fringe. A part of his left ear was gone. The Hexamer people viewed the visitor with little sympathy and yet not unkindly; for an animal is an animal, and by a certain inductive process men who handle beasts, whether wild or tame, develop a sentiment concerning them that is rather difficult to define.

So they let him run about the stable until fate, instinct, or just dumb luck—take your choice—led him to the prison of King James. The stablemen heard the mongrel's joyous yelp of discovery, and to a man they trooped back to witness Spud's finish. But there was no finish; it was a beginning. The men saw Spud—they gave him that name later—standing on his hind legs, his paws against the bars of the cage, his ears cocked stiffly, and his fringe of a tail wagging so swiftly that it was nothing but a pale chrome blur.

And King James—the fur was unruffled, even along the back of his neck, and that was good for Spud. The Bengal slouched lazily over to the bars and gave his guest a thorough sniffing, and then—lowered his head like a great big contented cat and rubbed it against the bars as near as possible to Spud's little moist nose.

The pact of friendship had been consummated, and the stablemen looked at one another wonderingly. Men who are much with wild beasts see things like this occasionally—but only occasionally—and so the wonder of it all never wears off. Just for a test they made believe to drive Spud away from the cage, and, wonder of wonders, this humble little product of the gutters turned and showed his teeth, and as for King James, he roared and roared until the stable shook.

Well, there was only one thing to do. They opened the grating and tossed Spud in, and Spud was not afraid, not one bit. He walked right up to the tiger with a happy squeal, and the great beast made him know his temerity by a gentle box with his sheathed claws. And thus having asserted his majesty he rolled about and played with his new friend until both were so tired that they lay down, very near together, and slept.

Spud never thought of leaving the cage after that, not even when the street sounds and the barking of other dogs called, and when the time came to ship the tiger to Hagenbeck's Zoo in Hamburg they let Spud stay, and no doubt so they will remain until death them do part.

Now this is a true story. Is it, in its simple way, any less inspiring or striking or touching than the storied devotion of Damon and Pythias, or of David and Jonathan, or of Darby and Joan? Friends! Yes, Spud and King James were good friends, according to all human conceptions of the term, and yet just how much of the human element entered must of course remain a moot question, and may well be left for answer to our popular animal writers and to let their bête noire—this is not a joke—John Burroughs.

As has been suggested, the case in question, while rare enough to warrant recording, is by no means so unusual that some incident of a similar nature has not come under the observation of the directors of perhaps every large zoo in the world. What is this animal friendship? Aside from the outward manifestations that liken it to the friendship of human beings, has it an emotional, mental, spiritual significance akin to that of mankind? In other words, is it knowing and reasoning, this animal devotion, or is it an outshoot of mere tribal instinct? Answer to suit yourself; animal men do.

"Of course animals think and feel the bonds of a friendship the same as we do," said Mr. Ditmars, the Curator of the Bronx Zoological Park. "You must not think that human beings are the only animals—we are animals, too, you know—who can feel things."

But then these words perhaps were born of the fact that Mr. Ditmars in his experience among wild beasts and tame beasts of every species has witnessed very unusual examples of animal love. In fact, there is one at the present time in Bronx Park, a few feet away from his office door—Bridge and little Zu-Zu, the silver fox.

Bridge is an Eskimo dog. He is Lieut. Peary's dog, the leader of the pack and the mainstay of the arctic explorer's last dash for the pole.

Now, if among animals you wish to select two species that are fundamentally and hopelessly at enmity with one another you need look no further than the canine tribe and that of the fox. Their hatred is inbred. From birth the fox instincts of natural cunning are in large part directed to the foiling of the murderous designs of the canine. They fear dogs more than they do snakes, and psychology will tell you that there is no deeper hate than that born of fear. As for dogs, they despise and detest their cunning quarry, and these emotions are components of a very baleful hatred, too.

But Bridge's cage mate died two weeks ago. He got a splinter of bone caught in his intestines and did not live very long. And it broke Bridge's heart. Incidentally this grief denoted a high type of friendship. One could almost see the tears, according to Mr. Ditmars, and night and day, after his poor mate's dead carcass was dragged from the barred inclosure. Bridge filled the air with mournful howls. He refused to eat, and moped in the back of his cage, eying the keepers with that mournful, indignant gaze which seemed to say:

"And why do you not bring my friend back? I am lonely."

It got so that Mr. Ditmars feared that Bridge would die himself, and finally in despair he seized upon little Zu-Zu, the silver fox. According to all theories Bridge should have leaped at the animal and broken his pretty sleek back with just one crunch of the wolflike jaws. But he did nothing of the kind. With grave dignity, as of one who has borne his sorrows and is weary of the world, Bridge walked slowly over to the cowering Zu-Zu and licked his little head with his tongue, caressingly—that is just what he did. And by and by after a few hours the beautiful little fox and the great big, noble dog were romping about delightedly. And they are together now, and they will stay together until Peary starts on his next dash to the pole—and then what? Ah, can you not foresee the immense tragedy that the separation is going to entail?

There was a tragedy up here last Fall, and you will have to go deep in your probings of the human heart to find anything more touching in its pathos, or sweeter in its devotion. It was Buldo, the terrible Gelada baboon, and little Tommy; little Tommy, just a plain, gray hand-organ monkey—no bigger than a whisper.

Mr. Ditmars had placed Buldo in a cage by himself. That was the only way to do; for Buldo had the slumbering fury of all the elemental passions in his heavy black eyes, and he had two tusks as long as the fingers of an ordinary man's hand. Standing three feet on his ironlike legs, he could take an ordinary steel bar in his hand and bend it over his knee. Day after day he sat in his cage in ugly grandeur, and regarded the keepers with a surly mien that could not be tempted from his face even at feeding time.

One day a consignment of some fifty little gray monkeys arrived from an animal dealer downtown, and while the keepers were placing them in the cage adjoining that of the baboon one of them, little Tommy, got loose and whisk! He had leaped between the bars of Buldo's cage. In a twinkling big Buldo was upon him, and then while the keepers looked he hugged the little fellow up to his breast as a mother would a baby. Just as gentle, he was, as ever a mother could be. And you may be sure that he had no intention of letting Tommy leave the cage again. Not that Tommy evinced any special desire to do so, but yet he sometimes would stray too near the bars and then Buldo would reach out and pull him back by the tail or the hind leg. And by and by there came a time when Tommy grew to love his big companion so that Buldo was not obliged to watch to see that he did not slip out through the bars of the cage. No, indeed; the understanding was perfect, Buldo was surly no more, and sometimes he even beamed upon the hated keepers. For hours and hours they would sit up on the limb of a tree near the top of the cage, chattering in their monkey language, which, says Mr. Ditmars, in its simple way is as well defined as our language.

When a pan of food was placed in the cage Buldo would always allow little Tommy to look it over first and to take out the very choicest bits for himself. Then after Tommy had skimmed the cream, so to speak, Buldo would approach the pan and take the leavings. And this one fact places the friendship of Buldo and little Tommy far above any animal friendship that Mr. Ditmars has ever observed; for as a rule when feeding time comes animals become—well, merely animals.

And thus it went on for two years, and then last Fall good old Buldo began to go the way of all baboons in this country—he contracted consumption. Daily he grew weaker, and daily little Tommy grew in tenderness. At first it was the stronger, bigger animal that gave all the favors, but now Buldo was ill and Tommy was full of health and strength and agility, and so it was he that left the choicer bits of food for Buldo, but by and by Buldo stopped eating, and one morning when they came to the cage they found Buldo dreaming and moping no more for the trees and groves he used to know—Buldo was dead, and sleeping in his old place by his side lay little Tommy. When they drew his companion out of the cage, little Tommy watched them with dumb eyes, but something seemed to tell him what the matter was. At all events, he did not try to slip out through the bars. No, he just sat in a corner of his cage, and later he went up on the tree branch where he and Buldo used to sit. Finally one morning there he lay on the bottom of the cage, just as Buldo had lain and just as dead. That was two weeks after his friend had gone.

"And," said Mr. Ditmars, who told this story, "it might have been consumption—and it might have been a broken heart. Who knows?" Yes, who knows?
